The Blue Hose will be strong around the perimeter position with a lot of depth at the guard position. Junior Jill Neumann returns at the starting point guard position. She started all 31 contests with 4.5 assists per game and 10.5 average in scoring. She was named the SAC Tournament MVP and made the South-Atlantic Regional All-Tournament Team. Sophomore Tracy Woody started at the other guard spot. She led the team in steals last year with 55 and had a field goal percentage of 50.6 percent. Junior Heather Couch returns after a medical redshirt last year. She averaged 3.5 assists from her freshman campaign. Senior guard Darah Huffman led the team in three-point field goal percentage with 36.1%. Junior Christina McRae saw action in 21 contests and did well on the defensive end. Sophomore guards returning are Candice Choice, Amy Monroe and Sara Smyrl. Choice averaged 2.2 points per game while hitting seven-of-15 three point attempts. Monroe saw action in 12 games last year coming off the bench to give the guard spot a spark. Smyrl had a preseason knee injury but is back and ready to push the starters.

"This is an outstanding freshman class," said Couture. "I keep on throwing new things at them in practice and they keep absorbing all of them."

The Blue Hose will open their first home game against Tusculum on November 13 at 6:00. They travel to Anderson College on November 21.

The Blue Hose were picked to finish first in the Preseason SAC. Neumann and Sloan were named to the Preseason First Team.

Dance Team makes debut

by Kathryn Mehl
Staff Writer

The evening of Wednesday, October 14, was a big night for Presbyterian College. Not only was it the First Annual Midnight Madness, but it was the Dance Team's debut.

"The students, as well as all of us as a team, were looking forward to Midnight Madness," said Dawn Gates, junior. "Some people were disappointed because the dances that we did weren't long enough. They are all looking forward to seeing us do longer sets."

The Dance Team came together at the end of last year when Mary Wylie Madden, the team's sponsor, put up flyers on campus for try-outs. For the tryouts, the girls had to learn one hip-hop dance, one light song, and one technical dance (two touches, leaps and turns).

Over the summer, the Dance Team went to a camp sponsored by the Universal Dance Association in Charleston, S.C.

At camp, the team learned a few basic dances and technique classes. The technique classes consisted of in-depth training for fine tuning leaps, turns and combination work. The PC cheerleaders were at the camp, also. The two teams had a chance to learn line dances together.

"We [the team] all like to dance, and we are working really hard. Our main goal is to increase spirit at PC," said Jill Colcolough.

The Dance Team performs during half time and timeouts at home basketball games. They practice twice a week on Monday and Thursday afternoons from 5:30-7:00 p.m.

The Dance Team also sponsored a contest this past week. They were looking for names with which they could rename the Dance Team. Students put their ideas into a box in Springs. The prize for a male winner was a date with the Dance Team, and the prize for a female winner was a date with the Men's Basketball Team.

The current members of the Dance Team are co-captains Dottie Sanders and Amanda Blackwell, Patti Carson, Dawn Cates, Thomasynne Kaye, Amanda Townsend, Jill Colcolough, Katie Herring, Leslie Lucas, Leslie Jackson and Junison Grant.

Football pounds Mars Hill

by Wil Elder
Staff Writer

The Blue Hose football team now stands at 5-3 overall and 3-1 in the SAC after Saturday's 41-7 victory against Mars Hill.

Cunningham connected to Eric Godfree for a 14-yard touchdown pass for the first touchdown of the game. Cunningham connected to Ben Power for an 82-yard touchdown pass in the second quarter for a 14-0 lead. Just before halftime, Joseph Bell blocked a punt and returned it for a touchdown. The Blue Hose were celebrating this mighty defensive play on the sidelines as they took a 21-0 halftime lead.

In the second half, Mars Hill added a touchdown, and PC answered right back. Donald Wilson ran on the left side for a two-yard touchdown run. PC was up 28-7 going into the fourth quarter. Cunningham passed to Travis Smith for a 48-yard touchdown pass. PC added a late touchdown pass to make the final score 41-7. PC totaled 463 yards of offense. Cunningham finished 14-of-26 for 283 yards and three touchdowns. Power had 141 receiving yards on four catches with two touchdowns. Roney Wade led the rushing attack on eight carries for 66 yards. Skip Hannah and Troy Gamble each had an interception as they led the defense by limiting Mars Hill to 300 yards of total offense.

The mighty Blue Hose fought the Catawba Indians in this year's Homecoming game. In addition, the game was also one of the festivities included in President John Griffith's Inauguration Celebration. The game was an exciting one, with a happy ending. The first half seemed to be quite arduous and placed PC with 7 points (credited to Brad Boleman's 75-yard reception from Cunningham) compared to Catawba's 17. After the crowning of senior Laura Keely as Homecoming Queen, the Hose returned with a renewed spirit. While the Blue Hose defense kept the Indians from scoring during the whole second half, Troy Gamble and Ryan Knight each had a touchdown run. Kicker John Redding, who hit 3 for 3 conversions, scored a 22-yard field goal to end the game with a final score of 24-17. Presbyterian led Catawba both in first downs, and passing yards.

On October 17, 1998 the Blue Hose took on the Fighting Christians of Elon College. Elon ran the opening kickoff back 92 yards for a early lead. However, PC's Todd Cunningham threw two touchdown passes to wideout Travis Smith, who leads the Blue Hose with 567 yards on 35 receptions, and seven touchdowns, for the 14-7 lead. Elon again tied the game with a touchdown pass, which was matched by Brad Boleman's 59-yard reception from Cunningham. The freshman quarterback has had an incredible season since he took over the starting position three games ago. Not only does Cunningham have 839 yards passing and an average 279.7 yards per game, but he broke the school record for passing in a game with 358 yards against Elon. Cunningham has a possibility of breaking the season high record if he stays true to his passing average. Kicker John Redding hit two field goals to push the lead to 26-21, which was surpassed with another Elon touchdown. Eric Godfree caught PC's final touchdown to make the score 32-27. The Blue Hose's gallant effort at the upset was brought to a conclusion with a 30-yard touchdown run by Elon's quarterback. In addition to Cunningham's new record, Boleman and Smith set new career-highs for receiving yards; and Duane "Big D" Thompson led the defense with a season-high 16 stops. Although the final outcome of the game was not in PC's favor, the Hose enjoyed many successes.

Midnight Madness

No Dick Vitale, but basketball spirit hits campus

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

As the pep band played and the clock hit midnight on October 15, the 1998 men's basketball team came running out to a roaring PC student and faculty crowd. Midnight Madness hit the PC campus.

The Midnight Madness festivities had started at 10:30 with a three on three tournament. Skip Hannah, a senior, wowed the crowd by running out of the stands and hanging on the rim as he and his team were introduced for the three-on-three tournament. Javier Roman had his chance to win $5,000. He had to make a lay-up, freethrow, a three point shot and a half court shot all in 30 seconds. Javier made a lay up and a freethrow but fell short of winning the $5,000. The new 1998-99 PC Dance Team was also introduced. They got the crowd going with one of their new dances during a timeout.

As midnight approached, Coach Gregg Nibert introduced the players, and senior Jason Cochcroft thanked the crowd for good participation. Then the basketball team showed a display of dunks and shots to get the crowd ready for a brief scrimmage. PC students and faculty got a good look at the basketball team as they showed their moves in a scrimmage.

"I would like to thank the students and the faculty who came out and supported Midnight Madness," said Nibert. "The support was tremendous and made Midnight Madness very exciting."

Coach Nibert returns for his tenth year. He is the all-time winningest men's basketball coach in PC's history with a 158-104 nine year record. Last year, the Blue Hose finished the year with a 16-12 overall record and a 9-5 conference record—good enough for a tie for second place in the SAC. For his efforts, Nibert was named South Atlantic Conference Coach of the Year for 1997.

Helping out this year are second-year assistant coaches, Bruce Evans and Chris League. Evans is a 1992 Furman graduate and League is a 1997 Clemson graduate.

The basketball team returns 10 players from the 1997 team. Departing from the team last year were two seniors, Blake Buchanan and Erik Rothwell. Starting guard, junior Yahnick Martin, led the Blue Hose in assists with 4.3 per game and continued to excel at the three-point line with 32.4%. He averaged 8.3 points per game. Sophomore Kevin rebounds. Humphries finished second on the team with 10.4 points per game and earned 7.3 rebounds per game.

All-SAC Player, senior Eric Burrow, returns at center. He led the Blue Hose in rebounding last year with 8.2 per game and finished the season with 10.2 points per game. He led the SAC in blocks last year with 56. He needs only 37 more blocks this season to become PC's all-time leader.

Coach Nibert added four freshmen this season: guard C o l l i s Carthrum from Stone Mountain, Ga.; guard C o u r t n e y Nesmith from Charlotte, N.C.; guard David Sloan from Dreher, S.C. and center Kelsey Green from Ontario, Canada. These freshmen will contribute at their positions this year.

Campbell started 17 games last year with a 6.5 points per game average and 2.2 assists.

All-SAC Player, senior Byron Graham, leads the forward spot. He led PC in scoring last year with 12.5 points per game and made 36 three pointers last year. The musele this season is at the forward spot because the Blue Hose return six upperclassmen at this position. The seniors are Cochcroft, Grant Gillespie and Jason McCraw. Mac Harper is the only junior returning at this position along with fellow teammate, sophomore DJ Humphries. Cochcroft played in 25 games last season and came on strong from the three-point line with 34.3% accuracy. Harper played in 26 games and averaged 4.5 points and 2.8

"At the first practice session, this team was very enthusiastic and worked very hard," said Nibert.

The Blue Hose will have an exhibition against the Columbia Sharkheads on November 7. The Eighty-fifth alumni anniversary game will also be held November 7. The Blue Hose's first home game of the season will be against Tusculum College on November 21.

The Blue Hose were picked to finish first in the SAC. Burrow was named to the Preseason SAC First Team while Graham and Humphries were named to the SAC Second Team.

Handball season begins full force

by Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

The second season of the club sport known for its physical contact and fast paced action started back up again last week. Handball made its debut last year as a club sport here at Presbyterian College. The game consists of 6 players plus a goalie. It is an indoor sport in which the basic goal is to throw the ball into a net about the size of an indoor soccer net.

"This game is kind of like soccer, but you use your hands, and you use a lot of basketball skills," said Mike Rosolino, the women's team coach.

Handball involves passing, shooting, and limited dribbling. This results in a game that is high paced and high scoring with lots of physical contact. Helping out with this growing sport is Mike Rosolino, Brian Madden as the commissioner of the league and Matt Nevam as the director of operations.

This year, the women's team has six of its players from last year: Kit Upchurch, Anna Richardson, Jill Treadwell (goalkeeper), Laura Keely, Barbara Eves and Melissa Wiggers, and eight newcomers—Michelle Tiano, Katie Dobbins, Anna Gasque, Claire Dunaway, Mary Margaret Fosse, Sarah Brailsford, Jennifer Glenn and Roxanne Stachow.

The team has played one game against Furman University at home on Thursday, Oct. 15. They lost the game, but the team is optimistic about the remainder of the season.

"We looked a lot better than last year and that is motivating. We have great defense," said coach Mike Rosolino. "Handball is a relatively new sport to most women on the team and so the women are attempting to learn the game better as they improve their skills."

"Last year the team was more experimental and out to have a good time, but this year we are more focused and experienced," said sophomore Barbara Eves who is the team's circle runner.

The men's team also played Thursday, Oct. 15 against Furman University and Lander University and came out victorious in both matches. The score against Furman was 30-28, and the team led Lander 29-27. The team is coached by Bryan Madden, as well as the captain of the team, Ronnie Setzer. The other members of this team are returning players Bryan Ridgley, Ted Kahl, Jarrett Harelson and Tosh Corley, and newcomers Ed Bianci, Tripp Taylor, Jeff Miller, Keith Roberts, Dan Lancaster and goalie Wayne Russell.

"This team is more willing to learn the actual sport of handball as opposed to street ball and is a lot more dedicated than last year's team. What this year's team lacks in experience, they make up for in raw handball talent," said senior Ronnie Setzer.

The next match will happen yesterday at Furman University. As of press time no statistics were available for the match.

Golf swings into action

by Jeremy Carl
Staff Writer

Under the leadership of Coach Tommy Addison, the PC golf team finished twentieth in the country last year and is enjoying another good year.

The team consists of eight returning players and two new freshmen. PC's returning players include senior Rawlings Lamotte, junior and team captain Russ Padgett, sophomore Thomas Addison, sophomore Jay Biber, sophomore Mark Easley, sophomore Andrew Gardner, sophomore Jon Sjostrom and sophomore Jay Stephens. Lawton Greenwood and Robbie Timms are the two freshmen on the team.

The team is young but has great talent. The top five players consist of sophomores and juniors, and last year Gardner received Freshman Player of the Year.

"We have a young team, and I am excited about the season," said Addison. The Blue Hose start the year with a preseason ranking of twentieth in the country and Coach Addison believes the team can improve its ranking.

PC's first tournament was the North Shore Intercollegiate Tournament in Topsail, N.C. from Sept. 18-20. The Blue Hose ended up finishing fourth with a team stroke average of 73.3. Biber, who was one under par, led the way for the Blue Hose with scores of 73 and 70. Addison was three under par with scores of 74 and 73. Gardner shot a 71 and 76, which is also three under par. Padgett's scores for the tournament were 76 and 74, which is six over par. Sjostrom had a first round score of 76 and a second round score of 81.

"I was very pleased with the way the team played," said Addison.

The Blue Hose played in the Presbyterian College Intercollegiate Tournament at Musgrove Mill Golf Club in Clinton from Oct. 12 to Oct. 13. Presbyterian and Georgia College tied for second place with scores of 598. The Blue Hose started the tournament with a first round score of 305. The team improved its play with a second round score of 293.

The team had six top-20 finishers in the PC Intercollegiate Tournament. Biber captured third place with a score of 147. Sjostrom finished eighth with a score of 149. Easley and Lamotte tied for thirteenth place with a score of 153. Addison and Padgett tied for eighteenth place with a score of 154.

Other scores for PC include Timms with a score of 183, Greenwood with a score of 168 and Gardner with a score of 159.

PC's next tournament was the Chris Cochran/Radford Intercollegiate Tournament at Radford, Va. Oct. 19-Oct. 20. PC, Hampton University and Western Carolina University tied for fifth place with a score of 608. Biber and Easley led the way for PC with a score of 148 and also finished in the top 20. Biber and Sjostrom, and Padgett had scores of 157, 157 and 168, respectively.

The Rear End: Cross-Country star rides stuffed camel to victory

by Robbie Bryan and Amos Disasa

In what can only be described as illegal, Presbyterian College cross-country runner Sarah Jones rode a pet camel to victory in a five team meet in Hopkins, S.C. The meet, which included teams from Benedict College, Allen University, Columbia Bible College, Dreher High School and PC, had over thirty competitors. The stuffed pet, whose name is Jamel, is Saudi Arabian born and raised but is now owned by two unidentified PC students. Often seen lurking on the Barron Hall portico, Jamel the stuffed pet has quickly become a Blue Hose icon and has even posed nude for several art classes.

After running 1.3 miles of the three mile course, Jones grabbed the camel from her father, who was camel sitting for the weekend, jumped on and proceeded to spank the camel with a stick. Jamel the Camel was understandably elated to be involved in a race of this magnitude and took to the beating kindly. With an urgency that could only be linked to his days as a doo-bay for countless Middle-Eastern kings, Jamel sped past astonished runners and carried Jones to victory.

An excited Jones said after the race, "I've always wanted to win the Hopkins County Invitational, and now my dreams are a reality thanks to Jamel and his comfortable hump."

One competitor from Dreher High School was astonished that something like this could take place. "I've been beaten by many things: the weather, other people, my own inadequacies, failure to prepare, lack of knowledge, Lee Davis, family history and even a lack of finances. But getting beat by a camel will forever muttering to himself, "I thought this was why we fought the Persian Gulf War."

Jones's fellow teammates are happy that Jamel helped PC win their first cross country meet, but are unhappy with themselves for not jumping on the camel first. One fellow teammate was caught thinking to himself,

"Camels suck, cross county sucks, and so does my life."

While Jamel is concerned that he has led some to view their lives in a different manner, he expresses no regret. Jamel continues to live a simple life despite his popularity. Other than occasional phone calls from Jones, Jamel watches "Ben Hur" and "The Ten Commandments" continuously.

Future Sarah Jones opponents can be thankful that Jamel has hung up his Air-Maxes after his record setting performance with Jones on his water filled hump. Regardless, his popularity has soared at Presbyterian. Girls have fallen in love with the cuddly Middle Easterner and often call 8974 to speak to the ambivalent owners.

Honduras facing major disaster after hurricane Presbyterian College students, faculty join relief effort

by Mindy Powers
Staff Writer

Close to 7000 people dead, 11,000 missing, 1 million homeless, 75% of infrastructure destroyed. These are the most obvious results of Hurricane Mitch's relentless attack on Honduras and the rest of Central America. Flooding and mudslides have killed thousand and have literally washed away villages and small towns. There is no running water in Honduras and the conditions get worse everyday. According to CNN NewsSource, "In the capital of Tegucigalpa, residents bathe and wash clothes in rivers contaminated by corpses and by chemicals from a factory upstream destroyed by the storm." Consumption of the water in Honduras may lead to an outbreak of several epidemics such as cholera, dengue fever and gastroenteritis. Despite millions of dollars in international aid, people in Honduras are still suffering food and water shortages and unbearable living conditions.

PC students have been traveling to Honduras each spring for the past nine years as part of the Third World Experience and Seminar course taught by Dr. Greg Henley, chaplain, and Dr. Charles McKelvey, associate professor of sociology. These students spend approximately ten days over spring break traveling around the country.

The goal of the trip is a learning mission," said senior Beth Johnson, a member of the 1998 Third World Experience class.

Students have visited neighborhoods on the riverbank in Tegucigalpa as well as banana plantations on the northern coast of Honduras. These neighborhoods have probably been washed away by the mudslides or flooding. Banana plantations in Honduras have suffered approximately $200 million in damages and will not be able to meet pre-disaster production levels until 2001.

Although Honduras has received millions of dollars in aid from foreign countries and independent organizations, Presbyterian College has also begun a program to help this disaster-torn area. Keeping with the college motto, "While we live, we serve," students who have visited Honduras through the Third World Experience and Seminar course have organized a way for all students, faculty and staff to participate in the relief effort.

"Anyone who's been to Honduras can see how the people live and how poor the country is. In the United States, this situation would be devastating, but we would be able to handle it; there, this is a complete disaster," said Johnson.

Johnson, along with the Chaplain, Dr. Greg Henley, has organized a fundraising drive. All funds will go to the Church World Service, an international relief agency comprised of thirty-four denominations and communions. This organization is working directly with the Christian Commission for Development (CCD) in Honduras. The CCD is the organization that serves as a host for PC's Third World Experience and Seminar course.

A candlelight vigil took place on the intramural track on Wednesday, November 18, 1998. This vigil included a one lap solidarity walk around the lighted track. Students, faculty, staff and members of the Clinton community were encouraged to attend this vigil.

Banana plantations on the coast of Honduras were hit particularly hard by Mitch. This worker was photographed by PC students before the hurricane.

This disaster in Honduras has devastated the country. Former President Jimmy Carter has estimated that it will take over 15 years for the country to begin to recover. However, it is important to realize that the people in Honduras have an extraordinary faith that will sustain them through this time.

"This is very devastating, but we must remember how much faith these people have. They may have lost everything, but they still have incredible faith," said Johnson.

According to Henley, the fundraising drive raised over $5,000. Henley expects that the amount will grow, as money is still being collected.

"People in Honduras were victims before Hurricane Mitch," said Henley. "The hurricane made matters much, much worse, wiping out the little that they had and taking away their hope of progress."

According to Henley, the fundraising effort is responding to the immediate needs caused by the disaster. These needs include water, medicine and rebuilding bridges.

"Through our efforts, at least some of the survivors will receive immediate assistance, but the real problems are much more long-term," said Henley.

POINT

Committee should reconsider policy change

In light of the controversy surrounding the new financial aid policy for students who live in the college townhouses, we at the "Blue Stocking" respectfully urge the financial aid committee to reconsider its policy.

We recognize and applaud the desire of the college administration to maintain a residential atmosphere at PC. Nevertheless, we believe that the new financial aid policy, while intending to maintain the residential atmosphere of the college, may actually encourage some students to move off-campus.

The small number of applications submitted to live in the townhouses suggests that students who might otherwise live in the townhouses may choose to live, instead, in a less expensive off-campus apartment because of the policy change. After all, if students are not permitted to use their financial aid to pay for room and board in the townhouses, then it is only logical that such students would choose to live in an off-campus apartment, where the cost of rent is frequently cheaper than that of the townhouses and where students are not subject to the same restrictions that govern students living in the townhouses.

Life in the townhouses is certainly not the same as life in the residence halls; but it is similar enough to on-campus living that it should be treated as such. Students who live in the townhouses are, in fact, on-campus in the sense that they live on land owned by the college. They are also subject to the same of the same regulations to which on-campus students are subject, and, like students in the residence halls, they are surrounded by members of the PC community.

We recognize that PC administrators must seek to be fiscally responsible, but we also believe that the community as a whole may be better served if students are encouraged to live in the townhouses. We hope that the financial aid committee will thoughtfully reconsider its policy.

SGA evaluates goals, looks forward to spring semester

It is hard to believe that this semester is already halfway over and exams are around the corner! It has been an exciting semester for the student body, and hopefully there will be just as much excitement and enthusiasm when we return in January. With Dr. Griffith's Inauguration over and since things have calmed down for the most part (despite the regular tests and papers), the Student Government Association is now in the process of evaluating our goals that we set this summer. We are very pleased with the support that the faculty and staff have given to the students thus far this year, and we hope to see this continue.

We are in the process of deciding what should be done with Calhoun's. It has been painted and furnished, but there has been a continuous struggle since 1995 with what to do with the facility. It has been proposed that Inklings be moved to Calhoun's, along with equipment, etc., and that the various speaking and band events be held in Calhoun's instead of Inklings. Calhoun's would also be open 24 hours a day for the student body to use as a place of study or to hang out and play pool and darts or just watch TV. There would be student workers in the evening to serve food, and there would also be vending machines located inside. The decision on what to do with Calhoun's is still under discussion by the SGA and the Inklings staff, but I would really like to hear input from the students, since this move would affect everyone. If you have any questions or comments, please do not hesitate to contact me or any other SGA member. It would be very helpful to have input when making a final decision.

I hope everyone has a great Thanksgiving! Good luck on any tests and papers that are coming up, and the best of luck with exams in a few weeks. The Board of Trustees will be on campus December 9 to complete the final draft of Dr. Griffith's Strategic Plan, so be prepared to become a major part of helping our president move PC to become one of the best liberal arts institutions in the Southeast. Our future is its future, and we are what makes PC thrive! Have a safe trip home for the holidays, and I look forward to beginning an exciting new semester in the spring!

College announces new financial aid policy for students living in townhouses

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

Last week, upcoming seniors applied to lease apartments in the college townhouses. As in past years, the college has given upcoming seniors the option of leasing an apartment in the college townhouses as an alternative to living in college dormitories or off-campus apartments. This year, however, the college has announced a financial aid policy that may discourage some students from leasing an apartment in the townhouses.

The new policy, enacted during a meeting of the Financial Aid Committee on Sept. 9, 1998, will go into effect June 1, 1999. The policy states that students who receive financial aid in an amount greater than the cost of tuition and fees cannot use any financial aid to cover the cost of living off-campus or in the college townhouses.

"Students who move off campus, either into the townhouses or apartments, will be allowed to receive grant aid up to the cost of tuition and fees," reads the new policy. "If the total grant aid, including PC merit and need based aid, private scholarship, and state and federal grants, exceed the cost of tuition and fees, the PC aid will be reduced. Grant aid from any source may not be used to pay for rent, food or books. Loans may be used for room and board cost. Eligible students who live off campus or in the townhouses may work through the campus work study program."

According to PC administrators, the new policy is one that was originally intended for the townhouses. According to Skip Zubrod, vice-president for finance, students living in the townhouses this year have been permitted to use grant money for room and board only because the financial aid policy had not been clearly stipulated. Since a number of students last year had applied to lease a townhouse with the expectation that they could use their financial aid to pay for room and board, the college decided to make an exception to the policy for this year.

"I don't view this as a change in policy," said Zubrod. "The policy was not changed, it just had not been articulated before."

However, many students are not content with the new financial aid policy, because the townhouses are treated as on-campus housing in many other ways, and because the new policy may affect students who plan to study abroad.

"If the townhouses were created to be an alternative to off-campus housing and now they're suddenly off-campus, what was the purpose of making them?" asked junior Nikki Richardson.

Indeed, the townhouses are in limbo in many ways. According to Mike Rosolino, director of residence life, some rules that pertain to the townhouses are similar to regulations for residential students and others are similar to regulations for students who live off-campus. Students living in the townhouses, for example, are given pest-control, maintenance and on-campus parking privileges in the same manner that such privileges are granted to students living in dormitories. In addition, students living in the townhouses must conform to on-campus regulations prohibiting dogs, cats, birds or other pets (with the exception of non-poisonous fish). On the other hand, students who live in the townhouses, unlike those who live in the residence halls, are not required to be on the college meal plan.

The alcohol policy that governs the townhouses perhaps best illustrates the position that the townhouses occupy as neither completely on-campus nor completely off-campus. All apartments in the townhouses are considered wet apartments, and students living in the townhouses are not subject to on-campus restrictions of liquor. On the other hand, students living in the townhouses are subject to on-campus prohibitions against kegs and common containers. "That kind of puts everyone in an awkward situation about not knowing exactly where they are or not," said Rosolino.

In addition, some students are concerned that the new financial aid policy will affect their plans to study abroad. According to Zubrod, financial aid for study abroad is handled on a case-by-case basis.

Zubrod also noted that only a handful of students receive financial aid beyond the cost of tuition and fees; thus, only a handful of students are affected by the financial aid policy. Indeed, a number of students who receive a financial aid package that covers more than just tuition and fees are varsity athletes who are less likely to study abroad than non-athletes. Nevertheless, a number of students receive sizable non-athletic scholarships.

Richardson, for example, receives a large music scholarship and plans to study abroad next semester. Since the cost of her study abroad program is less than the amount she receives in financial aid, Richardson hoped to use the balance of her grant money to continue her study abroad experience into the summer. The financial aid policy, however, prevents her from doing so.

If the number of applications to live in the townhouses that have been received by the residence life office is any indication of student attitudes toward the new policy, students seem less eager to live in the townhouses this year than they were last year. According to Rosolino, the residence life office received only 15 applications this year to live in the townhouses, while they received 32 last year.

According to college administrators, the new financial aid policy is not written in stone, but is subject to review. Dr. John V. Griffith, president of Presbyterian College, suggested that students, if unhappy with the new policy, should ask the financial aid committee to reconsider their policy.

"As we reasoned it through, this policy seemed both logical and fair; it's obviously not being experienced as logical or fair," said Griffith. "I would think that a request from students to revisit that [policy] and reconvene the committee would be the appropriate thing to do."

PC IN BRIEF

Annual Fund campaign surpasses 50 percent participation mark

To date, over 50% of the full time and monthly salaried PC faculty and staff members have made a gift to the college.

During the month of October, an on-campus Annual Fund campaign was held to help make PC financially stronger by soliciting the college's employees. The campaign has been very successful as the participation has increased from approximately 30% to over 50% to date.

The campaign is still underway as the goal is to reach 60% by December 31, 1998. Gifts continue to be sent in and many appear to be waiting until the month of December to make their contribution.

The campaign's success can be attributed to the hard work and leadership from Beth Couture, Dr. Ron Dempsey, Sheila Hill, Dr. Peter Hobbie, Dr. John Inman, Andrea Long, Norman Scarborough and Dr. Tom Weaver. Thanks to each of these individuals for their efforts and hard work.

A special word of thanks to each of you who participated and a reminder to those who have yet to--there is still time.

Administration bans glass bottles from fraternity court

At the last meeting of the Inter-Fraternity Council (IFC), held on Monday, Nov. 16, Dr. John V. Griffith, president of Presbyterian College, sent a memorandum to the IFC stating that bottles (glass containers) are banned from the fraternity court, effective immediately. The administration requires the IFC to enforce this ban and encourages all students to cooperate.

According to the office of the dean of students, the decision was made for safety and aesthetic purposes. An effort is underway to improve the appearance of the fraternity court and the conduct of Greek and non-Greek students.

Townhouse apartment open for upcoming spring semester

The Residential Life Office has announced a vacancy in the college townhouses for the spring semester. According to Mike Rosolino, director of residence life, the available apartment, which has recently been rebuilt after a summer fire, can house six students. The residence life office is accepting applications for the apartment on a first-come, first-serve basis. For more information, call the residence life office at ext. 8277.

Student legislature participates in conference

by Tara Sluder

Many students at PC are unaware of the active student legislature on campus. The student legislature is a mock legislature made up of about twelve students who share a common interest in politics. While student legislature is statewide, PC was one of the original schools in South Carolina to start one in the 1960s.

Bob Hill is the chairman of PC's delegation. The other officers are Will Edwards, vice chairman, and Dan Hart, secretary. The group meets weekly and just recently returned from a fall convention held annually for South Carolina school delegations.

Every year schools throughout the state send delegates from their student legislatures to a fall convention held in Columbia at USC. The representatives from the different colleges divide to form a Senate and a House of Representatives. Students present, debate and vote on bills written by their delegations. If a bill gets passed, it actually goes on to the real state legislature, where it goes through the same process.

"The purpose of having a student legislature and going to the convention is to familiarize students with parliamentary procedure and to interact with students from other schools," said Hill.

PC's delegation busied themselves earlier this semester writing bills to take to the convention. Some of the officers went to a workshop in Charleston on October 5 where they spent the day studying parliamentary procedure.

PC's delegation presented four bills at the convention. Two out of the four were passed. One was a bill to establish a minimum GPA requirement of a 2.0 for eligibility in high school athletics. The other was a resolution to reinstate auto-emissions checks in order to lower air pollution.

"Our delegation represented PC well, but I was disappointed with the overall turn out of small school delegations," said Edwards. "The larger schools controlled everything."

The students also elected statewide officers during the convention. On the state level, Hill, Edwards and Hart hold the offices of vice chairman of the agricultural committee, historian, and Upstate liaison, respectively.

"The convention is an excellent opportunity for anyone interested in politics," said Edwards. "You learn about real parliamentary procedure and take part in the actual process."

The fall convention was the major event for the student legislature, but there is also a convention in April. The spring convention takes place in Charleston and is more relaxed than the fall convention. It is a time for students to make preparations for the next fall convention.

The student legislature was not particularly active during the recent November elections as one might imagine.

"We're not associated with any particular political group," said Hill. "We're interested in how to be an elected official, not how to be elected."

The student legislature is open to anyone who is interested in politics. Most of the members are political science majors, but students majoring in all disciplines are welcome to join the group. It's too late to join the student legislature for the fall semester, but the spring semester will be open to new members.

"If anyone wants to join the student legislature, give me a call spring semester," said Hill. "Our group is open to anyone who has an interest in politics."

My hope is that next year PC will have an even stronger delegation with many new members," said Edwards.

HAVE A LIFE! HAVE A MISSION!

The Jane Todd Presseau Summer Missionary Scholarship can help you have a summer full of life and purpose.

If you are a PC student and a member of the Presbyterian Church (USA) or the Associate Reformed Presbyterian denominations and would like to serve as a missionary for the summer, the Jane Todd Presseau Summer Missionary Scholarship can help your vision of Christian service become a reality through one of your denomination's summer mission programs.

The recipient of the Jane Todd Presseau Summer Missionary Scholarship will have $2,000 credited toward his or her school account for the next school year. The scholarship is intended to help offset the potential summer income often sacrificed for missionary service. The scholarship also enables the student recipient to focus on other needed fund raising efforts for travel to the chosen missionary field and miscellaneous expenses.

Candidates for the Jane Todd Presseau Summer Missionary Scholarship should complete the PC (USA) Mission Service Application which may be obtained from the Presbyterian Church (USA), Mission Service Recruitment Office, 100 Witherspoon Street, Room 3415, Louisville, KY 40202-1396 (Phone: 1-800-779-6779; E-mail: michael.racelis@pcusa.org), or from the Chaplain's Office on the second floor of the Douglas House. References should include at least one member of the Presbyterian College faculty or staff.

A copy of completed applications should be sent to the PC (USA) Mission Service Recruitment Office and to the Presbyterian College Chaplain's Office by January 15, 1999. The student should keep one copy of the completed application for the student's personal file. The award will be announced on February 12, 1999.

Witness for Peace provides service opportunities for faculty, students

by Doodle Harris
Staff Writer

Last spring, Greg Henley, chaplain, and Dr. Charles McKelvey, professor of sociology, taught a semester-long class dealing in-depth with third world countries and their political, economic and social structures. During spring break, the students enrolled took a mission trip to Honduras and got a close view of a poverty-stricken people. The class and trip struck a sympathetic chord within the students, and, upon returning to America, the students were eager to find ways in which they could continue their studies and work.

"The prevailing question was 'What can we do in the United States to help people there?'" said senior Beth Johnson. "The students want to continue their mission and their work."

The group was contacted by the Greenville chapter of Witness for Peace, a fifteen-year-old faith-based organization formed to combat devastating poverty in Caribbean and Latin American countries. According to members of Witness for Peace, the International Monetary Fund and World Bank continue to devalue the monetary units of these countries while the countries are incapable of ever repaying their current debt. Witness for Peace is an activist group peacefully fighting for monetary policies in which debt is forgiven and restrictions on the World Bank are removed.

"It's shaking to see so many people living in such dire positions," said Henley. "The debt crises of third world nations have deadly results for its citizens."

At PC, Johnson and senior Jessica Glenn, another participant in last spring's Honduras trip, are teaming up to institute a Witness for Peace chapter on campus. The chapter will be student-organized, with Henley and McKelvey as resource individuals, and will be the first chapter of the organization on a college campus in South Carolina. The group of seven or eight students, mostly from the Honduras trip, have already had one organizational meeting and invited one guest speaker to campus.

The speaker, Ana Quirós Viquez, offered some startling figures of Nicaragua, her homeland. Fifty percent of Nicaragua's citizens live below the poverty line, and over forty percent of Nicaraguan children suffer from malnutrition. The average Nicaraguan family receives a weekly income of $30 yet requires $110 for basic needs.

Witness for Peace plans to offer a variety of programs for continuing student involvement in the issues that affect Third World countries. The organization hopes to host education forums, discussions of issues and possibly other mission trips for interested students. Johnson hopes Witness for Peace will "allow students to be aware of how U.S. policy affects those Third World countries."

For information on joining Witness for Peace at PC, contact Beth Johnson or Jessica Glenn or visit the website at witnessforpeace.org for national information.

Art exhibit in Harper Center displays faculty work

by Doodle Harris
Staff Writer

From October 9 to November 15 paintings, ceramics, sculptures and hanging canvases adorned the walls of the Elizabeth Stone Harper Gallery. Mark Anderson, Ralph Paquin, Blake Praytor and Ann Stoddard combined efforts to present "Diverse Approaches," a faculty art exhibit designed to showcase the various works and acute talents of the PC art faculty.

Senior art major Amy Krohn emphasizes the necessity of the exhibit.

"It shows the talent that our professors possess, and it is a tool to raise more awareness of the art department," she said.

Krohn feels that the display is a "way to get to know [the artists], because their art reflects who they are."

The biggest and most vivid pieces are the oil paintings of Mark Anderson, chair of the art department. His largest work, "The Promise," measures ten feet tall and sixteen feet wide and, another, "Corrections," consists predominantly of bright shades of red, orange, and yellow. These paintings, like Anderson himself, are complex and saturated with meaning. His paintings are of events witnessed in waking dreams and are responses to various passages in the Bible.

"The canvas can be a sort of spiritual mirror," said Anderson. "I believe that God inspires me to paint."

Anderson also describes his paintings as a prayer. His compulsion to paint comes from a need to "think long and reflexively about my subject and the world. Painting is an effort of self-knowledge without overbearing narcissism."

The sculptures spread about the display floor are Ralph Paquin's "The Distraught Figure Series." Paquin, whose sculptures are influenced by Rodin and Louise Bourgeois, is the newest full time member of the PC art department. Paquin selects various parts of the human form to recreate in three dimensions because "the human being is truly a remarkable miracle. Yet when examined closely, it is delicate and paradoxical." Although his sculpture is seemingly simple, his exploration of those paradoxes creates the piece's inner complexity.

"I am not so concerned with the idyllic beauty as I am with the bisection that forms when carnal meets with spiritualness, wreckage with resilience, substance with emptiness, and so on," said Paquin.

of the gallery. His photographs are technically precise, straight forward and totally black and white. In each, the chief focus is a person, that person's posture or expression and its relation to its surroundings.

"My portraits depict the uniqueness of each of my subjects, illustrating the hopes, joys, fears, and disappointments that binds us all together in my images. I hope to communicate not only the essence of the individual, but also our common humanity," said Praytor.

The least traditional art of the exhibit is that of Ann Stoddard, who is also the director of the gallery. Stoddard's employment of fiberglass as a medium and her art which is meant to be hung from the ceiling rather than on a wall, reveal her lack of conventional. Krohn simply describes Stoddard's work as "loose, free, experimental." Stoddard describes her own work as "a dissection of the imagination."

Stoddard works "in the vein of constructed/manipulated canvases" and wishes for her art to "float off the wall's surface."

"These neverlands are about dividing space and time; creating new and unknown places, seemingly foreign, only because we have not been there yet," said Stoddard.

Murder mystery comes to campus

by Kay Owen
Managing Editor

Death Suite is a murder mystery play that begins upon the audience's arrival, and the story continues until everyone leaves the theatre. The PC Theatre Company presented Death Suite Oct. 28-31. It was an interesting experience that occurred throughout the Caldwell Harper Theatre.

During the reception for the supposed concert of pianist Yuri Pianstovitz, characters walked among the crowd, arguing amongst themselves and interacting with audience members.

Brett, the bartender, played by Brett Lamb, courteously served males punch and lavished them with comments while virtually ignoring the females. Everything seemed rather normal until gun shots rang out in the lobby. Promptly thereafter, the Host, played by Margaret Fuller, arrived and escorted everyone into the theatre. From there the play proceeded.

We saw the shrewd work of Detective Hudson Hotchkiss, played by Daniel Cone. We began to suspect every member of the cast of killing Stuart Yendel. An obvious suspect was Stuart Yendel's ex-wife, Katherine Yendel. Other possibilities were the comical duo of "famous Russian dancers," Natasha Kutchka (Leisha Middleton) and Sergei Bolstov (Joe Stillwell), who were in the United States on tour. Also, Daisy (Lisa Lancetot) and Oswald Fromper (Hank Coleman) were on site when the murder occurred. The most difficult task was determining a motive, and the possibilities were endless. Were the dancers really dancers? Was Katherine Yendel jealous of her ex-husband, or maybe even seeking vengeance? Did the Frompers have a connection or a reason?

The play moved quickly, jumping from humorous sado-masochistic scenes in the Frompers bedroom to the revelation of the reserved Katherine Yendel that her true calling was to be an exotic dancer.

Surprisingly another murder took place; Sergei Bolstov was found dead by stabbing. Was the killer on a spree?

The audience was asked to interrogate all of the suspects on stage, though no one was beyond suspicion. Anyone in the theatre could have been the culprit. The questions ranged from silly to funny to seemingly irrelevant. They did, however, help to narrow down my choices. The game of searching for the truth ended after approximately one and a half hours. I will not reveal the killer, but I will give you one admonition, the one that appeared in the play program: Beware the guise. The killer is definitely among the cast, though it is not an obvious character. Suffice it to say, I was rather ruthless in my calculations, and I did receive the Silver Sleuth Award for determining the killer.

Sullivan appreciates PC experience, sees room for improvements

by John Penn
Staff Writer

Rodney Jamel "Rocky" Sullivan, the MSU President, is a senior physics major from Greenville, S.C.

Sullivan said he chose PC for several reasons. After his first visit to PC, he said, he enjoyed the atmosphere and knew he would get a great liberal arts education—specializing in his chosen field while getting a broad based education.

Sullivan's favorite thing about life at PC is "friendly folks."

"PC is my home away from home," said Sullivan.

Under Sullivan's direction, the MSU has held Diversity Week, two cookouts, a Homecoming party and a Halloween Carnival. According to Sullivan, the MSU's goals are to improve its activities, to expand its membership and to continue to fulfill its Mission Statement.

"We've surpassed our goal for the year, with the great support of the leadership council," said Sullivan. "This great group includes: Dawn Cates, Tabatha Wright, Cynthia Shands, Carolyn Lovell, Jackie Pearson, Stephann Newton, Di Young and Brian Riddle. I can't express my thankfulness enough; they are both my right and left arms. I couldn't have asked for anything better."

Sullivan has several ideas for ways in which PC could be improved. He hopes for increased diversity on campus, or, in Sullivan's own words, "more colored folk." Sullivan also hopes that there will be more activities available on campus during weekends in the future.

In addition to serving as MSU's President and its SGA Representative, Sullivan also serves as a Baily RA and SUB secretary and is involved in many other organizations—as Sullivan said, "The list goes on and on."

he understands the seriousness that his major of physics requires him to take. "Whatever he says he'll do, he does his best."

Following his spring graduation from PC, Sullivan plans to "chill out for the summer," then plans to begin studies at Florida State University as a candidate for a doctorate in Condensed Matter. In ten years Sullivan sees himself with a doctorate, with a job he loves and, maybe, with a wife and "little ones."

"My hope for life is to be best at what I do, but by myself—a man of God," said Sullivan.

Sullivan's advice to underclassmen reflects his strong faith.

"Get a good jump on everything in your freshmen and sophomore years—friends, organizations, but most importantly find some kind of spirituality, regardless of faith," said Sullivan. "Whatever you do it should make you a better person."

Sullivan said his most prominent memory of PC will be the dome and fountain at Neville being lit at night

Radio PC

Station works for more publicity

by Luke Ellis
Staff Writer

What does it take to get someone's attention around here?

Each day, hundreds of students traverse the covered walkway outside Springs Campus Center, along the way passing a host of flyers and large signs posted on the building wall. For the majority of students, these posters are passed in a hurry, given no more than a casual glance as the passerby rushes to class, lunch or an e-mail terminal. The more creative, and generally strange, of the signs are often never seen. However, occasionally one may see students stop in their tracks upon glancing one of the less conspicuous of the signs posted outside Springs.

"Local cat attempts world record of most things sat on," reads one small sign. "Watch channel 57 to cheer him on." Another encourages students to tune in to hear a fellow student comment (for an hour) on "why he doesn't like dogs using the bathroom in his front yard."

These signs are simply the latest in this fall's effort to increase awareness of and participation in Radio PC. Shows often start around midday and are run from the booth in Springs, where students may see friends and acquaintances inside wearing headphones, surrounded with audio equipment. Often these shows are broadcast inside Springs through mounted speakers. The radio can also be accessed by watching channel 57, the college's event bulletin board, on closed circuit television.

Now in its fifth year, PC Radio is larger and busier than ever. With twenty DJ's and almost thirty show times per week, manager Natalie Osborne, a junior from Lexington, S.C., is hoping that the awareness will increase across campus.

Admittedly, broadcasting a radio station on television makes it hard to attract listeners. Students have often complained of having to endure streams of endless campus news while listening to the radio. An easy way to encourage listeners, one might think, would be to get Radio PC on the radio. According to Osborne, it is not an easy process.

"Getting a radio frequency would involve a petition to a national agency and would cost extravagant amounts of money," said Osborne, hinting that by extravagant, she meant tens of thousands of dollars. As a result, she said "small college stations are becoming less and less common."

So what can one do to get more attention around here? In addition to the new posters and flyers, the station hopes to gain a reputation by word of mouth. Having increased the student participation, and the variety of shows available to listeners, it is hoped that each student can find an interest supplied by Radio PC.

"We have a lot more DJ's this year than we had in the past," said Osborne. "We have a variety of different shows, including country, punk, hip-hop and Christian. Also, we hope to begin doing interviews with CEP guests."

These interviews, exposing PC's Cultural Enrichment Program participants to the PC airwaves, will enable students greater access to the ideas and information presented during the CEP programs, which, in themselves, generally last only an hour.

So, what else can be done to encourage listeners? If the above is not enough incentive, Osborne offers students a bonus:

"We give away stuff."

Football Team Wins Awards, Bronze Derby Volleyball winning under new coach

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The Blue Hose football team finished 8-5 overall and 6-1 in the SAC this season. This is the best finish since 1979 when PC finished 11-2 and finished the regular season ranked #81 in NAIA. The Blue Hose swept many postseason awards, including the Bronze Derby back from Newberry this year.

Head Coach Darryl Dickey was named the 1998 SAC Coach of the Year. Freshman quarterback Todd Cunningham was named the SAC Offensive Freshman of the Year. He set the Blue Hose single season passing yardage mark and the single season touchdown mark. Troy Gamble, Lee Hannah, Travis Smith were all named to the First Team All-SAC. Keith Sargent, Rod Hammond, Tony Davis, Duane Thompson and Jeremy Rivera were named to the Second Team All-SAC. Gamble was selected to represent the Blue Hose at the 1999 Snow Ball held on the North Dakota St. campus in Fargo, North Dakota. He will represent the Last team. The game is slated for January 9, 1999.

The Blue Hose brought home the Bronze Derby on November 14, against archrival Newberry. PC pounded the Indians 45-14. Cunningham hit Smith and Power on 57 yard and 13 yard touchdown passes in the first quarter. Cunningham hit Smith again in the second quarter on a 54 yard touchdown strike. PC took a 19-7 lead into halftime. Gamble recovered a fumble and scampered 79 yards up the sidelines for a touchdown to put the Blue Hose up 26-7. Cunningham found Smith two more times in the second half for touchdowns. The first touchdown was a 44 yard strike and the second touchdown was a 35 yard strike. Cunningham hit Power for the final blow of the game on a 8 yard touchdown pass.

Cunningham finished the game 20 of 30 for 409 yards and six touchdowns. On Parent's Weekend, the Blue Hose crushed Wingate University 45-17. Cunningham hit Smith for a nine yard touchdown pass. Redding hit a 36 yard field goal to give PC a 10-0 lead after the first quarter. Wingate answered with a 39 yard field goal early in the second quarter. Cunningham hit Smith again on a 14 yard touchdown pass. Wingate came back and hit on a 42 yard pass play close the gap to 17-10. The Blue Hose scored a touchdown with 55 seconds left in Smith led the receiving corps with nine catches for 266 yards and four touchdowns. Ryan Knight led the rushing attack with four carries for 42 yards. The Blue Hose offense had 23 first downs and 490 total yards. The defense held Newberry to 333 total yards. Leading the defense was Thompson with 14 total tackles. Hannah and Harris each had two touchdowns and Brooks had one interception. Gamble recovered two fumbles.

The Blue Hose defeated Garner-Webb University 38-9 on November 7. PC jumped out to a 17-0 halftime lead. Scoring all of their points in the second half, Gamble returned a punt 77 yards for a touch down. Hannah returned an 18 yard interception for a touchdown to give the Blue Hose a 14-0 lead. With 35 seconds left before halftime, John Redding kicked a 37 yard field goal. The Blue Hose offense got cranked up in the second half. Cunningham hit one of his favorite targets, Ben Power on a 22 yard touchdown pass, one minute into the second half giving PC a 24-0 lead. Garner-Webb answered back with a five minute drive. Cunningham got hot after the Garner Webb touchdown. He hit Brad Boleman for two touchdown passes. One a 78 yard and the other a 50 yard touchdown pass to give the Blue Hose a 38-9 win at Boiling Springs, North Carolina.

PC tallied 431 yards of total offense and the defense held Gardner-Webb to under 200 yards in total offense. Cunningham finished the game 18 of 37 for 341 yards with three touchdowns and one interception. Boleman had five catches for 200 yards. Power had five catches for 69 yards. Knight led the ground game with 11 rushes for 58 yards. The defense sacked Gardner-Webb's quarterbacks six times. Davis led the defense with 13 total tackles.

On Parent's Weekend, the Blue Hose crushed Wingate University 45-17. Cunningham hit Smith for a nine yard touchdown pass. Redding hit a 36 yard field goal to give PC a 10-0 lead after the first quarter. Wingate answered with a 39 yard field goal early in the second quarter. Cunningham hit Smith again on a 14 yard touchdown pass. Wingate came back and hit on a 42 yard pass play close the gap to 17-10. The Blue Hose scored a touchdown with 55 seconds left in the second quarter on a Cunningham 24 yard touchdown pass to Power. PC took a 24-10 halftime lead. Cunningham hit Smith for his third touchdown pass of the day on a 19 yard strike. With four minutes left in the third quarter, Cunningham ran into the end zone on a 11 yard sneak. Dean came in the game to replace Cunningham and hit Smith on a 57 yard touchdown pass play.

The Blue Hose offense had 436 total yards, along with 21 first downs. The defense held Wingate to 371 total yards and to 15 first downs. Cunningham finished the game with 16 of 26 for 210 yards with one interception and four touchdown passes. Smith had eight catches for 144 yards and four touchdowns. Power caught seven passes for 107 yards and one touchdown. Wilson and Boleman led the rushing attack with 48 and 41 yards respectively. Gamble led the defense with 12 tackles and recovered one fumble. Hannah and Tyler each had an interception.

For the season the Blue Hose led the nation in turnover margin with +2.27 turnovers per game. The passing game finished thirteenth in the nation with 267 yards per game. The pass efficiency defense finished eighth in the nation with a rating of 86.5.

Cunningham finished the season 119 of 227 for 2,082 yards with 24 touchdowns and 11 interceptions playing in only seven games this season. Smith had 58 receptions for 1,099 yards and 16 touchdowns. Power caught 37 passes for 697 yards and nine touchdowns while Boleman caught 30 receptions for 556 yards and five touchdowns. Knight led the ground game this season with 119 carries for 439 yards and one touchdown. Wilson carried the ball 78 times for 310 yards and scored four touchdowns. Redding finished the season six of ten on field goal attempts. On defense, Todd Huffman led the team in total hits with 93. Gamble and Davis had 83 and 76 hits respectively. Hannah led the team with eight interceptions and Gamble had four interceptions. Brandon Moore led the team with seven sacks.

The PC Blue Hose volleyball team finished their regular season on November 12 with a record of 10-6 for the season, 6-8 in the SAC Conference. Despite their rollercoaster season of wins and losses, Coach Bugay remained optimistic about the conference tournament.

"Our goal for the SAC Conference tournament is to make it to the final match," said Bugay.

"It's been a rollercoaster season," said Stephanie Cloud. "At first, we lost a lot of games and got off to a rocky start. The second time through the conference, we showed a lot of improvement and beat some of the teams that we lost to the first time around."

The Blue Hose hosted Queens College on November 3. After three games, the Blue Hose came out victorious in all three, with scores of 15-9, 15-1, 15-11. Leaders for the games included Junior blocker Kinsley Craven with 13 kills and 5 blocks and Aisha Walker with 12 digs and 5 blocks. Captain Jenell Sanders tallied an impressive 32 assists. Freshman Kati Scott and junior Stephanie Cloud contributed eight kills apiece. Cloud has been the main go-to person all year.

"Personally, my role changed a lot this year," said Cloud. "I had never really played much offense, but I really liked being in this offensive position."

The volleyball team's final games were played in Augusta, Ga. on Nov. 10 against Augusta State University. The Blue Hose fell to ASU in three games, 15-8, 15-13, and 15-7.

"This season we came in not knowing what to expect with six freshmen," said Bugay. "It took us the first part of the season to develop team chemistry and roles, which made the second half of the season a more successful one heading into this tournament."

"Next year, our team will still be a young team with only two seniors, Kinsley Craven and me," said Cloud. "A lot of skill is coming back next season, so the season should be a really good one."

Cross-Country Teams finish strong

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The 1998 men's and women's cross country teams finished the year strong. The SAC became stronger this year with tougher cross country teams and first-year head coach Leigh Irwin saw improvement throughout the year in both the men's and the women's cross country teams.

"Let the goals a little bit higher for the SAC Conference Tournament this year because the field of teams is stronger," said Irwin.

The women's cross country team finished sixth out of eight teams in the SAC Conference Tournament with 167 points. Freshman Amy Kukla finished twenty-fifth with a time of 22:12. Sophomore Sarah Jones finished thirty-third with a time of 23:16, freshman Kate Reitsnyder followed behind Jones with a time of 23:22 and sophomore Heather Sherer finished behind Reitsnyder with a time of 23:25. "I feel that the team has come a long way this year," said Kukla. "Even though we are young we will be stronger and faster with the off-season workout program to compete in the SAC next year."

"We will lose Jill Webster next year," said Irwin. "She has been a strong runner and very loyal to the team and the team will miss her next year."

The men's cross country team finished seventh out of eight teams with 198 points at the SAC Conference Tournament. Sophomore Zac Braden finished seventh in the meet with a time of 28:14. He was named to the All-South Atlantic Conference First Team. Senior John Moorman finished forty-third with a time of 32:33. Senior Jay Blount finished forty-fifth with a time of 33:15 and junior Jonathan Todd finished fifty with a time of 33:40.

"The seniors on this team are Mark Dinkins, Moorman and Blount, and the team will miss their leadership," said Irwin.

"Both teams are strongly looking forward to next season and both teams will have to recruit more runners next season," said Matt Braswell.

After a strong season, Irwin hopes to have ten students on the women's and the men's cross country teams next year.

Men's Soccer team finishes season 10-10, upsets Gardner-Webb in first round of SAC

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The men's soccer team finished the regular season with a 10-10 overall record and a 3-4 SAC conference record. The Blue Hose advanced to the semifinals of the SAC Conference Tournament before losing to Mars Hill.

In the first round of the SAC Conference Tournament, the Blue Hose upset number-three-seeded Gardner-Webb 1-0 in overtime. Jamil Ficklin scored in the 104th minute of the game. Gardner-Webb outshot PC by a 14-7 margin but goalkeeper Phil Thomas kept the goal solid with nine saves in the win.

In the semifinals, sixth-seeded PC faced number-two-seeded Mars Hill. Mars Hill struck first in the ninth minute of the game. PC answered back in the 21st minute with a Drew Stephen goal. Mars Hill answered with four unanswered goals to win 5-1 to move into the finals of the SAC Conference Tournament.

"This team was fun to coach this year," said Head Coach Ralph Polson. "It was frustrating at times because we have lots of talent, we just could not put it together at times."

Stephen and Ficklin were named to the 1998 Food Lion SAC All-Tournament Team. Roddy Dinsmore and Stephen were named to the SAC First Team. Ryan Comer was named to the SAC Second Team.

The Blue Hose lost to Francis Marion on October 28 4-1. PC was down 3-0 at halftime. In the second half, Gus Gooding scored for PC in the 84th minute. Francis Marion outshot the Blue Hose 7-3.

On October 31, PC defeated Clayton State 1-0. Michael Napior scored the only goal of the game in the 53rd minute of the game. Thomas had one save in the game. PC outshot Clayton State 16-2. This is the one win the Blue Hose needed going into the SAC Conference Tournament.

"This year we played a lot of good players instead of having one starting lineup," said Polson. "We played a lot of good teams this year and we lost some confidence along the way, but I enjoyed coaching this team this year."

Blue Hose win SAC regular season title for women's soccer at 6-1

by Jeremy Carl
Staff Writer

Under the leadership of coach Brian Purcell, SAC coach of the Year, the women's soccer team finished the season 12-6 with a conference record of 6-1. PC's regular season conference record of 6-1 was best in the SAC conference.

PC, the number one seed in the SAC tournament, hoped to improve on their dominating season by winning the SAC tournament. The team's first opponent on Nov. 3 was #8 seeded Newberry. PC struck first when junior Anne-Marie Flaherty scored on an assist from Diane Hancock. Michelle Spangler's goal gave the blue hose a 2-0 lead and was the eventual game-winner. Newberry scored in the second half but PC held the Indians off for a 2-1 victory.

The win against Newberry enabled the blue hose to move on to play #4 seeded Lenoir-Rhyne who had previously beat Carson Newman. The game was a defensive battle with Lenoir-Rhyne scoring in double overtime to pull away with a 1-0 victory. The blue hose outshot Lenoir-19-13, but could just not find the back of the net.

Rhyne

"Although we had a tough loss to Lenoir-Rhyne, our season overall was a good one," said Coach Purcell.

"I was very pleased with leadership the senior class put forth this year," said Coach Purcell.

"The seniors were a good group of role models for the younger players and they will certainly be missed," said Purcell.

Even though the Blue hose did not win the tournament, the team can look back on many accomplishments. The team claimed its third straight shared or outright SAC regular season championship. The blue hose also received a ranking of fifth in the Southeast region.

Many of PC's players received awards for their individual effort. Sarah Price, Heather Jones, and Flaherty were all named to first team all conference. Jamie Harris, Courtney Swanson, and Diane Hancock were all named to the second team all conference. Scarlet Raymond was the SAC Scholar-Athlete for Women's Soccer for the second straight year. The blue hose look forward to another great year.

Meal card policy facing changes

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

On Monday, December 7, PC administration enacted adjustments to the meal plan program, limiting the number of times students can swipe their meal cards per day.

The week before the changes were enacted, a memo written by Clyde Smith, director of the PC canteen and bookstore, was posted in Springs Campus Center. In the memo, Smith stated that, "due to consistent abuse of the optional meal card policy," he found it necessary to enact some adjustments to the program "in order to return to the original intent of the optional plan."

Students may now order only one meal for breakfast and one meal for lunch. Anything that they order over $3.00 must be paid in cash. In addition, the canteen will no longer sell can drinks for across the counter sales.

Smith was unavailable for comment, but, according to Skip Zubrod, vice-president for finance, the adjustments in the policy are meant to bring the meal card policy more in line with its original intent.

"The plan was designed originally to be a substitute for a meal in the dining hall," said Zubrod. "It has now come to the point where people are taking 12, 15, 18 cans of soda, juice or other things, swiping their meal cards three or four times; and that's really not the way the plan is priced or designed. We need to bring the plan back to what it was, as an alternate to the meal plan in the dining hall."

Many students have expressed displeasure with the changes in the meal card policy.

"I think the new policy robs students of the money they were saving with the old policy," said junior Bob Ehrhardt. "I think for the first time since I've been here students were actually getting their money's worth under the old policy; but now, under the new policy, they're not."

Zubrod noted that the policy was designed with the expectation that most students would not use all the meals to which they are entitled, and he noted that the frequent swiping of meal cards in the canteen has cost the college some financial losses.

"When you buy a 15-meal plan, it's not priced for 15 meals per week, because we know that all students are going to miss some meals," said Zubrod. "So there's a missed-meal factor built into the 21-meal plan and into the 15-meal plan."

According to Zubrod, the problems with the meal plan have been a topic of discussion throughout the semester.

"Mr. Smith and I have talked about it off and on over the semester," said Zubrod. "We talked about it a little last year because it was kind of a problem, and we said this year that we would cut it down to no more than two swipes. But that hasn't been enforced, and that's our fault. We've allowed people to take three and four swipes per day. We just had to draw a line somewhere, so I talked to Clyde. I said that we needed to post it and give people some time instead of just enacting the changes the next day, so that's why we sent out the notices."

Some students are upset that students were not consulted when the adjustments were made to the policy.

"To resolve this problem I feel there are several steps which need to be taken," said junior Jay Philpott, SGA vice-president and chair of the food committee. "I feel the 'overseers' of the meal card program need to form a committee with students before making any more 'adjustments.' No further 'adjustments' should be made without student input. The committee should submit a new meal plan and guidelines to the students before the end of the school year for a vote. The new plan should be implemented next year."

According to Zubrod, the meal plan policy is subject to change.

POINT

Administration should reconsider adjustments to meal plan policy

Considering the many students who are dissatisfied with the recent "adjustments" imposed on the meal plan program by college administration, PC administrators should reconsider these changes.

Since the college requires all PC students who live on-campus to purchase either a 21-meal plan or a 15-meal plan, PC administration should do all that it can to ensure that PC students get their money's worth. Before the recent adjustments to the meal plan were enacted, students could easily use all the meals to which they are entitled by purchasing additional food and/or drinks in the Springs canteen. Under the new policy, however, students are not afforded the same flexibility in purchasing meals with their meal cards. One PC administrator even noted that the meal policy is designed with the expectation that students will not make use of all the meals to which they are entitled.

We at the "Blue Stocking" believe that the recent restrictions on use of the meal cards place an unjust financial burden on students. If the canteen is suffering financial loss because students are eating all the meals to which they are entitled, then the college should reprice the meal plan without the assumption that students will not make use of all the meals available to them.

We urge PC administration to reconsider the recent changes to the meal card policy. In our opinion, no changes should ever be made to the food policy without the input of students. Perhaps the administration should follow the recommendation suggested by Jay Philpott, SGA vice-president, and form a food committee composed of students, faculty and administrators to work out a solution to the disagreements about the meal plan. The PC community has settled many divisive issues in the past through communication between students and administration, and we are confident that an acceptable and fair solution to the problems with the meal program can be reached if students and administrators together discuss the issue.

"Glory to God in the highest heaven": Making preparations for Christmas

During this time of advent, I wait for all that is familiar about Christmas. I wait for the smell of pie in the oven, the taste of Christmas dinner, the carols of Christmas, the nip in the air and the hugs from relatives. But I wait expectantly for the minister to read again the story of Jesus' birth.

As I reflect on the birth of Christ this year, I am struck by the angels in the story. In Luke's gospel, angels appear more than once in the birth story found in chapters 1 and 2. The angel Gabriel is sent to tell Elizabeth, that she will give birth to John the Baptist. Then Gabriel visits Mary and tells her that she will give birth to the Son of God. But the angels that spark my imagination this year appear to be shepherds.

In that region there were shepherds living in the fields, keeping watch over their flock by night. Then an angel of the Lord stood before them, and the glory of the Lord shone around them, and they were terrified. But the angel said to them, "Do not be afraid, for see—I am bringing you good news of great joy for all the people: to you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, who is the Messiah, the Lord. This will be a sign for you: you will find a child wrapped in bands of cloth and lying in a manger." And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest heaven, and on earth peace among those whom he favors!" (Luke 2:8-14, NRSV)

Imagine an angel of God appearing before you in the splendor of the Lord. The angel speaks a message of comfort and joy. "Do not be afraid, for see—I am bringing you good news of great joy for all people." The angel's news is for all people, not just the people of Israel 2000 years ago. No, the angel's news is for all people. It is for you and me. "To you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, who is the Messiah, the Lord." A child was born for YOU on a specific day in a specific place, but the child is not an ordinary child. No, this child is the Savior, the Christ, the Lord. God chose to send God's son as the Savior for you. The angel's message was and is good news of great joy for all people.

Having heard the good news, imagine suddenly a multitude of the heavenly host appears. They start praising God saying, "Glory to God in the highest heaven, and on earth peace among those whom he favors!" I wonder: what does a heavenly host sound like? I imagine it would be something like a whole football stadium full singing together—but much more.

Listen to the message. Glory to God!

And on earth peace among those whom he favors! Is this a limited peace? What about those whom he doesn't favor? No, this peace is not a limited peace. This is God's peace, a peace that passes all understanding. And God's favor rests on all people. Earlier the angel proclaimed, "To you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, who is the Messiah, the Lord." God has shown his favor on all the world by sending a Savior, who is Christ, the Lord.

Consider the angel's message again. Glory to God! And on earth peace among those whom he favors! Imagine the power of those words spoken today. A man in Peru is dying because there is no clean water to drink. A child in Ireland is orphaned because of religious war. An adolescent girl starves herself to fit the image portrayed by society. In our broken world, phrases like "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace" are bold statements that need to be heard.

During advent this year, prepare to experience all that is familiar about Christmas. Most of all prepare to hear the good news of great joy proclaimed by the angel on the first Christmas. "To you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, who is the Messiah the Lord." I pray that you won't just hear the good news but that you will respond to the good news. I pray that you will lift your voice joining with the heavenly host praising God saying, "Glory to God in the highest heaven, and on earth peace among those whom he favors!"

Peer Connectors comment on weekend social life at Presbyterian

It is an all too-common scene:

It's Thursday afternoon and "Griffin" has just gotten out of class. The only thing on Griffin's mind is the night's activities—he cannot wait to party. After his classes, Griffin goes to Springs Campus Center to hang out with his friends and get a bite to eat. He and his friends sit around and have a discussion about who will have the key tonight. Griffin goes into graphic detail about how he needs to get drunk that night; he's had a long, tough week with lots of tests and he feels he deserves it. Soon, Griffin and his friends decide to go to El Jalisco at 7:00 and drink "big beers" until about 10:30. Everyone agrees on this and decides to rest up for the night.

On his way back to his room, Griffin runs into the girl he hooked up with the previous weekend. Lisa is walking his way, dressed in a long shirt, leggings and running shoes, with her key ring/ID holder in one hand and her backpack strapped around both shoulders—and, of course, NOT carrying a purse. She sees Griffin and says hello, looking a bit embarrassed. Griffin really likes Lisa but has never actually gone out on a date with her. They see each other out at the houses any way so what's the purpose of driving all the way to Greenville for a date? What Griffin does not know is that Lisa has wanted to go out on a real date for a while but hasn't had the nerve to tell him. It's not like she's her boyfriend or anything. Griffin talks to her for a minute and tells her of his plans for the night, saying that he might see her out.

As he continues to his room, Griffin sees the freshman guys he met at the houses last weekend and ask them what's up. They return the greeting and ask him what he is doing that night. Griffin tells them about the keg at College Park and invites them to come. They say they might and Griffin goes on to his room. The only thing on Griffin's mind is B-I-T-C-H.

Griffin's alarm goes off at 8:00 a.m. Friday morning. He struggles to get up out of bed, knowing that he needs to go to class, he's already skipped many Friday mornings.

Man, he thinks, I shouldn't have drank so much last night.

Griffin thinks again how glad he is not to have any 8:00 classes this semester and decides to skip his 9:00 class. The rest of the day, Griffin struggles to make it through classes. He feels better after classes and decides to go jog around the Intramural fields with a friend to run off some of the beer he drank the previous night. While he and his friend jog, they discuss the previous night. Griffin can hardly remember what he did, but his friend gladly reminds him of what a fool he made of himself. After running for a while, Griffin begins to wish he hadn't smoked so many cigarettes. He swears to himself that he will never drink that much again.

After his run, Griffin takes a shower and goes to Springs again to meet up with his crew. It's only 2:00, but Griffin has already forgotten his promise to himself and is ready to start partying again. Slowly, he and his friends venture up to his room to play some cards and drink. The music is loud, the door is open and people are wandering in and out of his room. Before anyone realizes, it is almost 11:00 p.m.

"Nobody will be out before 11:00, anyway," Griffin thinks.

When they realize that it is time to go out, Griffin and his friends stagger outside before they wonder who will drive them out to the houses. "DRUNK BUS," someone yells, but no one else wants to wait around for it. Griffin decides to call Lisa to get a ride. "She won't mind," he thinks. When Lisa comes to pick Griffin and his friends up, they all pile into her little Accord. On the way to the houses people are hanging out of her windows, whooping and hollering at everyone they see—that is, until they see Public Safety. When they get to the houses, Lisa and Griffin get into an argument because Lisa wants to go back in by herself. Finally, she leaves, but Griffin says that he doesn't care one bit—knowing that the next day he will call her and apologize. If he remembers the fight.

Sunday morning, Griffin struggles once again to get out of bed. His breath still reeks of cigarettes and alcohol, and he swears to himself that he will never drink again. He gets up and looks at himself in the mirror.

Man, he thinks, my gut is getting huge!

Griffin decides that he needs to exercise more than he already does.

Attention Presbyterian College students: do the events that occurred in the story of Griffin's weekend ring any bells? Many of the themes of this story are the themes (or norms) here at PC. While we realize that many of our student weekends do NOT consist of these events or "norms," too many of them do. There are a great deal of positive PC norms, such as exercising or greeting every one you pass on the way to class, but a great deal of the norms, such as drinking to get drunk, can be unhealthy ones.

We as Peer Connectors are concerned with the health and well being of the students here at PC. We have provided this story with the hopes of prodding some students to reevaluate some of their actions and decisions that are potentially harmful, physically and mentally. We would like to continue this editorial, possibly with a commentary emphasizing more positive norms unique to PC, and we would like the involvement of the students who make up these stories. We are willing to take on any perspectives and criticisms, so please send us any comments, norms or ideas that we should include in our next story.

Thank you, and enjoy your weekend!

Recent changes in financial aid policy are discriminatory, elitist

Dear Editor

We are writing to concur with the "Blue Stocking's" recommendation to the PC financial and committee (November 25 issue) that it reconsider its new policy, which states that "students who receive financial aid in an amount greater than the cost of tuition and fees cannot use any financial aid to cover the cost of living off campus or in the college townhouses. We are disgusted that our Christian institution would deem a blatantly discriminatory and elitist policy necessary to maintain a residential atmosphere and to be fiscally responsible. Members of the financial aid committee have failed to address the fact that this new policy will discriminate against students whose financial situation prevents them from being able to pay for townhouse or off campus housing themselves. It is also inexcusable that this new policy will discourage students from studying abroad (obviously considered off-campus housing) who would never otherwise have the opportunity to experience another culture. Is our college trying to send the message that only students who can afford the expenses of living off campus or in the townhouses deserve the opportunity to do so?

The financial aid committee is also giving the impression that only students who come from well-off backgrounds should have the privilege of studying abroad. Both of our educations have been greatly enriched because of the semesters we studied in China and France. If we had not been able to use all of our financial aid, neither of us could have afforded such a wonderful, life-changing experience. We are concerned with the future quality of education at PC if it starts denying students such privileges simply on the basis of their economic background. The argument that this policy will affect only a handful of students is irrelevant; it sends a clear message that at PC, money, not people, is the bottom line. If we want to become one of the ten best liberal arts colleges in the South, then we should start by showing that we value all students equally.

Sincerely,
Sara Simpson

Owen named editor-in-chief for Spring, 1999 semester

The Russell Subcommittee on Student Media has named Kay Owen the editor-in-chief of the "Blue Stocking" for the Spring semester of 1999. Owen, a junior English and political science double major from Irmo, S.C., currently serves as the Managing Editor of the "Blue Stocking."

Administration enacts changes to meal plan

"Can it be changed? Absolutely," said Zubrod. "I don't think we can change it for next semester. If we were to change it in the future we would have to price the meal plans differently. We might want to look at options that a lot of schools are doing now—when you buy a meal plan you get a debit card, rather than swipes. Can we look at all that?" Certainly!"

Philpott expressed confidence that the meal plan issue can be resolved through communication between students and administration.

"I am confident that Dr. Griffith's administration will work with the students and make needed changes," said Philpott. "His track record here at PC has already proven that."

Madrigal dinners Choir continues annual tradition

by Tara Sluder
Staff Writer

On the nights of December 4 and 5, the members of the PC Choir, decked out in full medieval attire, welcomed guests to Castle Clinton, otherwise known as GDIH. Students performed the thirty-third annual Madrigal Dinner, directed for the first time by Dr. Porter Stokes.

Guests gathered at Castle Clinton, home of Lord Bleu Heuse, sophomore Roger Harrison, and Lady Candelot, sophomore Rachel Reiff, for a night of fine dining and Christmas entertainment. A procession of the characters and a welcome by Lord Bleu Heuse to the guests began the evening. Following the welcome was a full course meal, accompanied by the voices of the PC Choir.

As guests dined, the fictional story of how Clinton was settled in years past unravelled through drama and song. A concert section after dinner included ten or twelve songs. The repertoire consisted of madrigals, as well as Renaissance Baroque pieces. The choir also sang a few familiar hymns such as "What Child Is This" and "The First Noel." The songs featured several vocal and instrumental soloists. The audience joined the choir for several famous numbers.

"The Madrigal Dinner is an attempt to take the style of music and the way it was performed in the 1500s and present it to the community," said freshman David Ridenhour. "It is a reenactment of events in the Renaissance period incorporating the costuming, music, and way of life during that era."

While still keeping with tradition of previous Madrigal dinners, Dr. Stokes put a few new twists to the year's performance. In the past, the Madrigal Dinner featured only the Madrigal Singers. This year, however, all members of the PC Choir participated.

"This year the group is much bigger," said Harrison. "The Madrigal Singers have teamed up with the rest of the choir, and everyone has equally important parts."

Another difference in the performance was the music. This year, all of the madrigals were Christmas songs. Keeping with tradition, however, the final number of the evening, for the thirty-third consecutive year, was "We Wish You a Merry Christmas."

In addition to the voices of the PC Choir and the Madrigal Singers, the Madrigal Dinner featured PC's brass ensemble along with the Miller-Rowe Consort. As many may remember from the November CHD, the Miller-Rowe consort features PC music instructor Michael Miller on classical guitar and David Rowe on hammer dulcimer.

The meal was prepared by staff members of GDIH and served by the choir. GDIH was clad with Christmas decorations and flowers.

The members of the choir spent much time preparing for the event.

"We began working on the music after the Presidential Inauguration near the beginning of the semester," said Harrison.

The choir spent many extra hours putting finishing touches on the music during the week of the performance.

A large crowd of people from the community along with friends and family of the performers gathered for the dinner.

"Members of the Clinton community made up the large majority of the crowd at the dinner," said Harrison. "Next year I would like to see more PC students attend the event."

"Preparing for the performance has been a very interesting experience," said Ridenhour. "I've been exposed to music this semester that I wasn't previously familiar with. The music of the dinner is very unique in that the songs aren't the traditional Christmas carols we all grew up with."

PC Theatre presents three one-act plays

by Ben Acton
Campus Life Editor

Tales of Loves, Labors, Lost, a series of three one-act plays that ran December 7-8, signalled the start of the PC Theater Company's studios season.

Each of the plays was directed by a member of the Theater Company. Each play also dealt with one of three themes: love, labor, and loss.

Romula Lincey's Can Can, directed by senior Candi-Jean Smith, was the love story of the series. The play was poignant in its description of the memorable loves of its characters. Through overlapping soliloquies each character recalls a special relationship they had with another person.

An ex-GI remembers a brief love affair with a French girl, who in turn reminisces about her first man. An elderly woman and a young housewife also share memories of their special and unique relationship. Both pairs of loved ones end their stories with a lover's promise to never forget one another. The cast includes Kelly Alaska, Matthew Ballard, Mary Beth Williams and Allison Bailey.

I chose to produce this play because it really made me think about what happens to people when they remember relationships they had," said Smith. "It's the remembering that makes these relationships so sweet."

The second play, He's Having a Baby, directed by junior Joe Stillwell, is a comedy depicting what the world might be like if men were the child-bearers and women paced in the maternity waiting room. The story revolves around the characters of Mrs. Murray, a first time parent who is at the point of hysteria; Mrs. Foster, a seventh time parent and very clam about the whole affair; and Mrs. Grotton, another repeat performer as a parent, but determined this time to have a girl rather than a boy. The play is very thorough in its portrayal of the reversing of society's roles, including in its depiction the way the White House would change its operation and the existence of men's maternity suits. The cast includes Kim McKee, Judy Murray, Robyn Loveless, Holly Holmes, Sarah Connor and Felicia Ard.

The last play, Patricia Loggins' "Inner Circle," directed by senior Lisa Inocent, is also the most tragic of the three plays, in "Tales of Loves, Labors, Lost." The story revolves around the trials of a lost young man named Mark. Mark tried drugs once in his life and in the process shared a needle with an acquaintance. Now Mark has AIDS, and in order to cope with the disease and the toll it will take, Mark and his friends build a time capsule of memories which they will be left to live with for the rest of their lives. CBS evening news has hailed this play as "The most innovative and significant youth AIDS awareness project of its kind in the nation." The cast includes Sandy Boyd, Hank Coleman, Katie Connor and Susan Haynes.

The plays are being directed by students as part of a directing class taught by Dr. Dale Rains, professor of speech and drama.

Strategic plan in final phases

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

On Monday, December 7, the strategic planning task force, a committee composed of students, faculty, administration and trustees, convened to consider the strategic plan for Presbyterian College in the next decade.

The strategic planning process began last spring, when the strategic planning task force was formed and charged with formulating a vision statement to guide Presbyterian College in the next decade. This vision statement was released this past September (see "College releases final draft of vision statement" September 30, 1998).

This past September, Dr. John V. Griffith, president of Presbyterian College, appointed four commissions to develop models for PC to carry out its mission in the future in the areas of integrated living and learning, technology, core curriculum and international studies. The commissions submitted reports to the president on Nov. 13. From these reports, the president developed the strategic plan.

"Basically, we were aiding the president in trying to decide what the important issues are," said Dr. Peter H. Hobbie, associate professor of religion and chair of the integrated living/learning commission.

Griffith expressed pleasure with the commissions' reports.

"I am very pleased," said Griffith. "It was clear that people took the task very seriously and grappled with the issues." In working with the chairs of the commissions, we tried to develop a standard set of questions, so that the reports would come back in somewhat similar forms and we could then weave them together into the coherent document that is the strategic plan. So in terms of the quality of the content, the response to the task and the form of the outcome, I couldn't be more pleased. I think we have a lot of good stuff to work with."

Griffith worked with a part of the editing committee of the strategic planning task force to draft the strategic plan. While the commissions were developing their reports, the committee chairs met weekly with Griffith, Joseph Nixon, dean of students, Dr. David Gillespie, vice president for academic affairs and dean of the faculty, and Dr. Ron Dempsey, assistant dean of academic affairs, to coordinate ideas. Griffith then drafted the strategic plan with the help of these individuals and Dr. Fred Davidson, chair of the strategic planning task force. The strategic plan was released to the rest of the task force last week.

According to junior Bryan Riddle, who, along with senior Laura Keely, serves as a student member of the strategic planning task force, students have had a large role in the strategic planning process.

"A lot of students have been on all the committees, and you can tell by what's been presented in the document that student input has been there," said Riddle. "It shows through. That's what's exciting—to see that the students have had input that was able to be used in the product that we have here."

The strategic plan is composed of three parts. The first part includes the vision statement and strategic goals that were ratified by the faculty, students and board of trustees this past September. The second part of the vision statement is entitled "accomplishing the vision" and outlines the organization of the strategic program in three areas—the educational program, the allocation of resources (human resources, financial resources and facilities) and promotions (public relations and marketing) and the generation of new resources. The third part, which has not yet been developed, discusses the implementation of strategic goals and objectives. PC administration and faculty will develop this part of the strategic plan next semester. The commission reports appear in appendices.

Griffith noted that the strategic objectives in the plan should be viewed with an attitude of flexibility.

"Strategic objectives should not be viewed as commandments written in stone," said Griffith. "They are objectives; they are challenges to us. Once the board approves them, then it becomes our responsibility to investigate the feasibility of doing these. A good strategic plan needs to be viewed as an organic document—something that's alive and that is changeable and is responsive to changing ideas and changing environmental pressures."

Riddle praised the flexible nature of the document.

"Ten years is a lot when it comes to our culture," said Riddle. "Things can so easily shift from decade to decade. I really think that the plan is going to be flexible enough to adapt to the needs of the students and to be the college it needs to be to meet the needs of students in the year 2010. That's what the plan is for. I think it's really solid."

The college community is invited to review the strategic plan. As of press time, the final version of the document had not yet been released to the college community, but a copy of the document is on reserve in the Thomason Library. The board of trustees will review the plan next semester.

profession, Miller spends her time involved in SGA or in the Zeta Tau Alpha sorority.

"I think that the Greek system really gets an undeserved bad rap from a lot of people," Miller said. "My sorority has really given me the chance to really get to know a group of girls."

While forming a close bond with her sisters and holding several leadership positions, Miller has also taken time to help the community. She has recently joined senior Kate Lindsey, the soccer team and the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity to conduct a bone marrow drive.

Helping people has become a large and fulfilling part of Miller's life and college experience.

"My advice for students of the future is to get involved, college is what you make of it," Miller said. "Also, go abroad, it will be the best experience of your life."

Miller made the decision to attend PC after visiting Davidson University. Her decision was easier because of the attitudes at the different colleges.

"Davidson was my first choice," said Miller. "But while on a visit, the Davidson students and faculty almost seemed snooty compared to the warm, open-hearted PC atmosphere."

When not focusing on her future in the medical Miller studied abroad in St. Andrews, Scotland where she extended her medical education.

"My study abroad has given me a much wider perspective on life," said Miller. "It helped me to see that there are other places than Clinton, SC. I also learned that though we have different cultures, we still share the basic human needs."

Miller recommends students to study abroad and advises any student to ask questions while deciding. She also asks students to try new things because things that seem strange are only different, not wrong.

While flying to her destination, Miller suppressed all tears and doubts of Europe's existence with excitement for the good times to come. With a 36-hour sleep deprivation, Miller arrived in the land of Scots realizing that she had made the excellent decision of learning in foreign territory.

Her fear of what was yet to come was nothing compared to her fear of apple juice.

"On a dean's dorks' retreat, we were snowed in our cabin, and I came down with strep throat," Miller said. "The dean's wife (a specialist of home remedies) ordered me to drink a glass of apple juice every hour, and I have hated the stuff ever since."

Miller's other fond memories of her Presbyterian College experience have been the little things. She has fond memories of staying up late into the night talking with her friends.

Miller seems to be an inspiration to all who she encounters. Her housemate, Mary Francis Patrick, gives the following comments on her best friend of nine years.

"Karin Miller is the most sincere, hardest working person I know. She is a great asset to PC," said Patrick.

After slow start, men's Undeclared Lady Blue basketball boosts record Hose win Augusta State University tournament

by Jeff Walker

The men's basketball team has won five games in a row to boost their overall record to 5-4. The team has made some offensive and defensive changes to give them a better balance.

"Turnovers have hurt us in a few games this season, but our defense has stepped up and played good defense," said head coach Gregg Nibert.

PC played host to Emmanuel College on December 3. PC broke away from a six-point halftime lead to a 21 point blowout. PC won 84-63. Byron Graham went 10 of 16 from the floor en route to scoring a game high 29 points. D.J. Humphries and Eric Burrow also scored in double-figures. Humphries was 8 of 13 for 17 points and Burrow was 8 of 12 for 19 points.

"Byron played well and he had a breakthrough game," said Nibert.

PC pulled out a ten point victory over USC-Aiken 68-58, after being down by one at halftime. Graham and Burrow both scored 18 points to pace the Blue Hose. Jason Cocheroff also added 11 points. PC shot 53 percent from the field and shot 47 percent from behind the three point arc.

In Newberry, PC defeated a tough Lander team 57-56 on November 27. Graham scored a team high 18 points and Kevin Campbell chipped in 16 points. Burrow scored eight points while bringing down seven rebounds. Again, PC got hot from behind the three-point line by shooting 53 percent.

The Blue Hose won a tough game against Erskine College 59-55 on November 24. Cocheroff and Burrow paced the Blue Hose with 12 and 10 points respectively. Courtney Nesmith helped the Blue Hose to victory by scoring eight points off the bench. The defense held Erskine to 33% shooting for the game.

The first victory of the season came at home against Tusculum. PC defeated Tusculum by scoring 48 points in the second half for a 73-64 victory. Graham scored 16 points and grabbed eight rebounds. Cocheroff shot 50 percent from the field and scored 13 points. Burrow chipped 13 points. The defense held Tusculum to a season low 23 percent shooting from three-point land.

Three of PC's first four losses came in Florida at the Disney NCAA Division II Tip-off Tournament. PC lost to Augustana College 84-70, Florida Southern 68-61 and Queens College 84-78. PC will play Anderson College on December 12 before heading to the Bahamas to compete in the Nassau Sunshine Shootout over Christmas Break.

The Blue Hose women's basketball team has taken off on a winning streak this season, coming out victorious in all of their first seven games. The undefeated team is led by Coach Beth Couture, who is beginning her tenth season as the PC women's basketball team's head coach. This year, Assistant Coach Leigh Irwin joined the coaching staff. Irwin graduated from PC in 1996 after lettering in varsity basketball for four years. The team has shown great success so far this season, exceeding 80 points in three games and having a 7-0 record.

The season began with a 80-51 win against Tusculum College at Templeton Center on Nov. 13 and the winning streak has continued.

"This year's team has a great attitude, and all of the girls are eager to put the team first," said senior captain Jenny Condon. So far this year, we have been supporting each other in practice and in the games. Everyone has been performing their job to their full potential level."

On Sat., Nov. 28, the Augusta State University Jaguars traveled to PC to suffer an 85-78 loss to the Lady Blue Hose. PC dominated the first half 43-29, and the closest that ASU came to the Blue Hose was 5 points. Presbyterian was victorious due to high scoring PC players, great defense and free throws in the final stretch. Guard Jill Newman led the points for the game with 23. Sophomore Rachel Sloan, senior Darah Huffman and sophomore Tracy Woody all contributed double figures scoring. Huffman went five for six from behind the three-point line. This home win continues the team's 19 game home winning streak which began in 1997.

The next game for PC was against Tusculum College on Nov. 30 when the Lady Blue Hose traveled to Greenville, Tenn. to battle it out with the Lady Pioneers. Presbyterian won 79-67 due partially to their tremendous 11 out of 16 record for the game with shooting from behind the three-point line. Star players for the Lady Blue Hose include forward Sloan, with 19 points and 14 rebounds. Three-point master Huffman sunk five from behind the line, and tallied up a total of 19 points for the game. The Blue Hose were behind after the first half 34-33, but then they returned to the court after half-time with a 14 point run on Tusculum and came up from behind for this tremendous win.

This past weekend, the Lady Blue Hose traveled to their first tournament of the year at the Ameri Suites Courtyard Classic hosted by Augusta State University. Presbyterian returned with two more wins under their belt. On Dec. 4, PC faced Brewton Parker in the first round of the tournament and crushed the opposition 66-43. High scorers for the game were Sloan with 18 points and eight rebounds, sophomore Tracy Wood with 13 points and junior Jill Neumann with ten points. On Dec. 5, the Blue Hose defeated Augusta State University for the second time this season, 70-66 final score. This game was the team's first big challenge of the season, and the game went back and forth the entire match. Presbyterian clinched the win due to free throws in the final minutes of the game and an increased intensity in defense in the second half. The Blue Hose won the tournament due to their hard work.

"The team played really hard and we played together. We had great defense in both games. They played together, and I am so proud for them for winning the tournament," said Coach Couture.

Rachel Sloan and Tracy Woody were named for the All-Tournament team, and Sloan also was awarded MVP for the tournament.

"Our goals for the season are to win the SAC Conference and Conference tournament. We won the tournament last year, and we would like to win it again this year. Also, qualifying for the NCAA tournament is one of our main goals. We have a tough conference this year with competition from Catawba, Carson-Newman and Wingate. We've been working hard this season, in the pre-season and now. The freshmen are doing awesome and are helping out the team tremendously. Everyone is pushing each other to do their best, and we all have high expectations for the season," said Condon.

The Lady Blue Hose played Wed. Dec. 9 against USC Spartanburg. As of press time, stats were not available.

Men's tennis served well by Women's tennis team marked experienced upperclassmen by youth, prepares for season

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The men's tennis team is coming off its best season ever. The Blue Hose went undefeated in SAC play and captured the end of year conference tournament. They won the NCAA East Region Playoffs that sent the team to the National Championships before losing in the first round.

Head Coach Bobby McKee returns all starters except Tom Swift and Ronnie Setzer. Experience will be the key for this year's team. The Blue Hose return five seniors in three-time All-SAC Preston Menning, two-time All-SAC Zach Loftis and in Will Stewart, Chuck Webb and Todd Roemmich.

"Tom was our leader last year, these five seniors will be our leaders this year and will have the experience to compete at the next level," said McKee.

Junior Jeremy Carl and sophomores Donny Thoresen and Seaton Womble will see consistent playing time. Thoresen played well during the fall season. His best result was getting to the finals of the ITA Regional Championship where he lost in a tough three-set final. He also placed tenth out of 48 players in a tournament at Clemson.

These upperclassmen will be joined by two freshmen: Shane Whatley and Sam Small.

"There is a different kind of pressure on this year's team," said McKee. "All the teams in the conference are on the same level, winning the SAC Conference and Conference Tournament at the end of the season."

Seven of the teams that PC will face this year appeared at the Final 16 National Championships last May. PC will play five NCAA Division I teams this year.

Last year's team finished ranked number 21 Nationally and third in the East Division. This year's preseason rankings were unavailable going to press but McKee thinks the team will be ranked number three in the East at the beginning of this season.

The women's tennis team is ready for an exciting year after coming off a year that saw the women's tennis make it to the final 16 of the NCAA Division II Tournament. Coach Donna Arnold leads the tennis team into stiff competition this year.

"We will play a lot of top teams this year and this schedule will be challenging this year," said Arnold.

The Blue Hose lost only one player last year in Kimberly Hampton. Kelli Kirkland returns with experience and senior Robyn Loveless joins the team to stabilize the experience factor. Alle Burriss is the only returning junior.

This year's team is young. Four sophomores bring the experience to the three new faces on the team this year. Returning sophomores are Sunny Armstrong, Heather Combs, Clayton McGee and Allison Merritt. The new freshman will add depth to this year's team and get to see some playing time. The new freshman are Susie Coggin, Kelly Fitzpatrick and Louisa Hargett.

The Blue Hose competed in three fall tournaments. The first tournament was at Furman during the second week of classes and was a warm-up tournament for Furman Wofford and PC. The second tournament was the ITA Regional Tournament. Fitzpatrick made it to the final of her flight. Merritt and Combs made it to the "B" Flight finals. In doubles Clayton/McGee faced teammates Combs Merritt in the finals. Clayton/McGee have a chance to go to the National Tournament and compete in the doubles flight. In the third tennis tournament, PC played in the Georgia College Tournament Merritt made it to the finals and lost in three sets. Coggin/Loveless made it to the doubles final.

With the rankings just released, PC is third in the region and twenty-second nationally. Fitzpatrick and Coggin are ranked fifth and twentieth in the East rankings. The doubles teams of Clayton Fitzpatrick and Combs/Merritt are ranked fourth and ninth in the East Region. Nationally, Fitzpatrick is ranked sixteenth.

"This year's team has a lot of depth and each individual will contribute to a very young talented team coming off a great year last year," said Arnold.

Men's, women's handball teams close regular season

by Jeremy Carl
Staff Writer

The men's and women's handball teams concluded their regular seasons with records of 6-2 and 0-6, respectively. This season marked the second year of the program's existence.

Under the leadership of Coach Mike Rosolino, the women's handball finished the regular season 0-6 but hoped to finish the season strong with an impressive showing at the end of season tournament at Furman University.

In the team's first game of the tournament the team lost to Furman University by a score of 7-0.

The team bounced back from their loss to Furman and lost a tough second game to Lander by a score of 11-10. In the first half Lander came out firing and jumped out to a 7-1 lead, but PC was able to reduce Lander's lead to 7-3 before the half ended. In the second half Lander increased their lead to 11-6. PC scored its tenth goal with 40 seconds left in the game.

"While we were disappointed with the overall record, we made some great improvements, and I was pleased with the overall attitude and effort of the team," said Rosolino.

Some of PC's players received individual recognition. Kit Upchurch and Barbara Eves were named to the all-conference team.

Under the leadership of Coach Brian Madden, the men's handball team, finished the regular season 6-2 and tied for the regular season east East Division Championship with Benedict College.

"Handball was formed for students to have fun and learn a new sport," said Madden.

The teams first match of the conference tournament was against Southern Georgia, whom they defeated 25-21. Seven of the PC players scored goals for the Blue Hose. Leading the way for PC were Seniors Brian Ridgley and Ted Kalb with six goals each. Other high scores were Senior Ronnie Setzer with five goals and Junior Ed Bianchi with three goals.

In their second match PC suffered a 21-10 loss to Emory. The Blue Hose got behind 8-5 in the first half and were never able to recover.

The team tied for third place in the tournament with Georgia Tech behind Benedict and Emory.

PC players also received individual rewards. All conference players from PC include Setzer, Ridgley and Kalb. Setzer also received East Division player of the year. Ronnie Setzer and Brian Ridgley are also being looked at by the Olympic Committee.

ZETA BUS CAPSIZES

SENIOR ROCKEY SULLIVAN SAYS, "PUT DOWN THE DOPE"

Over dinner this past Thursday night, while salting his steak fried potatoes, better known as home fries, senior Rocky Sullivan got an angry look on his face, turned to the table behind him and exclaimed, "Put down the dope." When asked to elaborate by his dinner partners Sullivan did nothing of the sort, and simply said, "Put down the dope."

NEW ADDITION TO SPRING'S "ONE SWIPE A DAY" POLICY

Not only will students be limited to one swipe a day in the springs cafe, but they will also be more cheated out of their money by being beaten, stabbed, mugged and frowned upon. Springs blue lady Anita Duck remarked, "We are not trying to cheat people. We are merely trying to recreate the fifties diner scene where a boy and girl would share a drink with two straws."

A local Clinton resident who previously believed that monkeys only lived in Africa reports, "I seen it!" Men's, women's handball teams close regular season

by Jeremy Carl
Staff Writer

The men's and women's handball teams concluded their regular seasons with records of 6-2 and 0-6, respectively. This season marked the second year of the program's existence.

Under the leadership of Coach Mike Rosolino, the women's handball finished the regular season 0-6 but hoped to finish the season strong with an impressive showing at the end of season tournament at Furman University.

In the team's first game of the tournament the team lost to Furman University by a score of 7-0.

The team bounced back from their loss to Furman and lost a tough second game to Lander by a score of 11-10. In the first half Lander came out firing and jumped out to a 7-1 lead, but PC was able to reduce Lander's lead to 7-3 before the half ended. In the second half Lander increased their lead to 11-6. PC scored its tenth goal with 40 seconds left in the game.

"While we were disappointed with the overall record, we made some great improvements, and I was pleased with the overall attitude and effort of the team," said Rosolino.

Some of PC's players received individual recognition. Kit Upchurch and Barbara Eves were named to the all-conference team.

Under the leadership of Coach Brian Madden, the men's handball team, finished the regular season 6-2 and tied for the regular season east East Division Championship with Benedict College.

"Handball was formed for students to have fun and learn a new sport," said Madden.

The teams first match of the conference tournament was against Southern Georgia, whom they defeated 25-21. Seven of the PC players scored goals for the Blue Hose. Leading the way for PC were Seniors Brian Ridgley and Ted Kalb with six goals each. Other high scores were Senior Ronnie Setzer with five goals and Junior Ed Bianchi with three goals.

In their second match PC suffered a 21-10 loss to Emory. The Blue Hose got behind 8-5 in the first half and were never able to recover.

The team tied for third place in the tournament with Georgia Tech behind Benedict and Emory.

PC players also received individual rewards. All conference players from PC include Setzer, Ridgley and Kalb. Setzer also received East Division player of the year. Ronnie Setzer and Brian Ridgley are also being looked at by the Olympic Committee.

ZETA BUS CAPSIZES

Over dinner this past Thursday night, while salting his steak fried potatoes, better known as home fries, senior Rocky Sullivan got an angry look on his face, turned to the table behind him and exclaimed, "Put down the dope." When asked to elaborate by his dinner partners Sullivan did nothing of the sort, and simply said, "Put down the dope."

Administrative Judicial Council determines verdicts, announces time to start healing

by Ben Acton
Managing Editor

The end of the fall semester was not a peaceful time for all PC students. Early on the morning of Sunday, December 15, two related altercations took place between members of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity and several African-American students.

According to a memo released by PC president Dr. John V. Griffith on December 15 to the faculty and staff of the college, "An event that began as a gathering of friends and associates deteriorated into altercations that were personal in nature but divided along fraternity affiliation and racial lines. Despite repeated efforts of all involved students and Public Safety to contain this situation, it escalated into an extended confrontation."

In the memo, Griffith also relates the two incidents that resulted into extended confrontation.

"The first event took place at the PIKA fraternity house following a Christmas party that was closed to the general student body," reads the memo. "The PIKAs opened their party around midnight to the general student body and numerous students joined them. An altercation occurred that resulted in a student injury that required medical attention and the decision of the PIKAs to close the party."

"The second event took place in Georgia Hall and involved students who were involved in the earlier incident. One student was injured and required medical attention."

College administration was first made aware of these situations around 3:00 am Sunday morning as Dean Nixon, dean of students, responded to a call from Public Safety.

"I was notified by Public Safety at approximately 3:00 am that there was a disturbance going on at Georgia Hall," said Nixon. "I arrived at Georgia Hall around 3:15, and told the students involved at the dormitory to go to their rooms and stay there."

Dean Nixon also went to the hospital to see both of the individuals who were injured.

As a result of these incidents, Dean Nixon and Public Safety began an investigation to determine what caused the incident and to identify who was involved. The investigation resulted in Code of Conduct charges against eleven individuals.

As information from this investigation was made available to Griffith, he decided to invoke an option available to the college's judicial system, provided on p. 89 of The Knapsack. Griffith explained this action in another memo, dated December 16 to the faculty, staff and Judicial Council.

"Because of the amount of time that will be required to hear the resulting cases and the time of year in which these cases should be heard... I have appointed an Administrative Judicial Committee," Griffith wrote. Griffith also asked the committee, which was chaired by Dr. George Ramsey, professor of Religion, to hear the cases on January 7 and 8, 1999, before the start of the semester.

"Of the eleven individuals charged, one pled guilty and accepted the proposed penalty," said Ramsey. "Three Administration releases new financial aid policy concerning townhouse residents

by Kay Owen
Editor-in-Chief

Due to students' concern, the Financial Aid Office has revised the policy for students living in the townhouses. Judi Gillespie was in charge of rewriting the policy in conjunction with the other members of the office. She believes the new policy will better suit students' needs and wants.

This policy is much better than it was because you could originally only get financial aid to cover tuition and fees," she said. "You had to cover your own board. Then, due to the concerns and some students' appeals, this is what we've arrived at — a new policy."

The New policy reads as follows:

Students who elect to reside in the townhouses beginning in the academic year 1999-2000 will be under the following policy:

If the student's grant and scholarship aid from all sources (PC funds, state, federal and private scholarships) add up to more than the cost of tuition and fees, the student may use the excess amount of the grant/scholarship aid to pay toward the townhouse rent. The student is allowed to use the excess aid amount on up to the cost of a dorm room and is responsible for the difference between the cost of the dorm room and the townhouse cost. Loans may be used to offset these additional costs.

If the student still has grant/scholarship aid exceeding the cost of tuition, fees and dorm costs, the student may (but is not required to) purchase one of the two campus meal plans (15 or 21 meals) the student is responsible for the difference between the remaining aid and the full cost of the meal plan.

The emphasis of the new plan is that excess financial aid may not cover the difference between dorm and townhouse living. Also, any money remaining in excess that is not used toward a meal plan will result in a reduction of scholarships. Gillespie also emphasized that the number of student who will be affected by a reduced scholarship package is minimal.

"This doesn't apply to anything but 1% of the student body," she said. "Only 1% has that much money in grants and scholarships. Very few have enough to cover all tuition, fees and board. You'd only be talking about full scholarship athletes and students on full academic scholarships."

Gillespie would like students to be aware that it was due to their concern that the policy was revised. She worked with the Financial Aid Office and President John Griffith to enact a new plan to better suit students.

"I think it is important that the student body know that the administration is concerned with students' wishes," Gillespie said. "That is why we did revise it [the policy] and look at it again."

If students have any concerns or need assistance calculating their personal financial aid packages, Gillespie is available in Smith Administration building.

"We're more than happy to work with each student on an individual basis to show them what their package will be," said Gillespie. "It does get confusing why you try to interpret it sometimes."

POINT

New townhouse policy fair, considerate

The administration is on the right track by revising the financial aid policy for students residing in the senior townhouses. Student concern ran high over last semester's revisions, and it is good to see that the school's leadership was willing to consider students' needs and desires and tackle the policy anew.

The current policy seems to provide fair and accurate funding for students on scholarships and receiving grant money. Because few students do have funds that exceed the tuition, fees and boarding costs on campus, it is understandable that the policy does not allow for scholarship money to cover the difference between dorm and townhouse living.

A big "thank you" and commendation to the administration for supporting the core of this institution, the students. Through such efforts, the administration affirms their commitment to students and encourages a united community for the future.

Community must unite to overcome tensions

Due to recent events on campus, some tensions have arisen between students. It is our hope that the truth and our faith in this community may supercede any differences between individuals and cover any rifts that have developed. The idea of Presbyterian College is a family environment in which all students, faculty and staff may interact on an academic as well as personal basis.

If any students have concerns about the events that took place Dec. 13 or the resulting attitudes of fellow members of this community, we urge them to consult a student leader or faculty/staff member.

These wounds may be healed, but it will take a campus-wide effort to bridge gaps between races, groups of friends and campus organizations. Please become an active part of the healing process by attending the discussion groups conducted by Shelia Hill or participating in other events on campus that promote unity and understanding.

Last semester I studied abroad in Sydney, Australia. This experience was an incredible educational adventure. It is difficult to describe studying abroad. Without a doubt, this type of experience is the most extreme emotional rollercoaster once can put themselves on. The week before I left home I was terrified. I was leaving everything and everyone I knew, and I was going to a place where I knew nothing, not even my address and phone number. However, at the same time, I was totally excited. Going to Australia was an opportunity of a lifetime, and I knew that the time I spent there was going to be awesome. But first I had to get there. After enduring 23 hours in either an airport or a plane, we finally landed in Sydney. I was so exhausted and overwhelmed I couldn't believe I was actually in Australia, the other side of the world from home.

The initial feeling of shock gave way to a brief period of fear and loneliness. Everything around me was new and different. Suddenly, I knew no one and nothing. While it was exciting, it was also very intimidating. All the little differences, such as the way the toilets flushed or the currency, added up to a large frustration for me.

As we start our last semester of the 1998-99 academic school year, and for some of us our last semester as a PC student, I am excited about all the things that the Student Government Association, as well as other campus organizations, have planned thus far. As many of you know, the Strategic Plan has been under construction since May 1998. It is exciting that we are all a major part of PC's growth and the changes that occur and will occur over the course of the next 10 years.

The SGA is currently working on collaborating with Inklings and Calhoun's. There has been discussion between the SGA as well as the Inklings staff about the move, and we hope that this will be a positive change for the student body. The name of Calhoun's will be changed after a contest when a $100 cash prize is awarded to the student who comes up with the most creative and appropriate name. The atmosphere will be somewhat similar to a coffee house, open 24 hours through back door access with your dorm card and a great place to study or just spend time with friends. There are three television sets with Soon, though, the frustration subsided as I grew accustomed to these differences. I realized that I was going to have an amazing time. And I did. I made friends with people from all over the United States and Australia. I took a class on Aboriginal Studies. I swam and kayaked around the Great Barrier Reef. I hiked and camped in the same part of the outback as Crocodile Dundee. I held a koala and petted a baby kangaroo. I attended the 25th anniversary concert of the Sydney Opera House. I experienced an entirely new culture that I grew to love and cherish.

As great as these experiences were, the best thing for me about studying abroad was what I learned about myself. When I arrived in Australia, I was frightened and alone. While I was in Sydney, I was totally self-reliant and forced to make all my own decisions. When I left, I had gained a new confidence in myself, as well as wonderful friendships that I will have for the rest of my life. I believe that everyone who has gone abroad will agree that the experience, whether it is in Australia or China or wherever, makes a person stronger and more complete and that studying abroad is one of the best ways to learn more about yourself.

Greene thanks campus for support

I would like to express my sincere and heartfelt gratitude to the many, many students and to the entire campus community for the tremendous love and support you have shown me during these past challenging months.

Dealing with and going through treatment for cancer is not an easy task. I want you to know that your many expressions of concern and especially your prayers have given me great strength to fight this battle to the greatest of my ability. I have truly been overwhelmed by the way everyone has reached out to me during this difficult time, and I feel very blessed to have so many people who care about me.

I am doing well at the present, am thrilled to be back in the office and greet each day with gratitude and a positive attitude. I look forward to being actively involved with all of you again and hope you will come by to see me. I have missed you so much. God bless you all.

individuals pled guilty, but challenged the proposed penalties, and the other seven individuals pled not guilty."

According to Dr. Ramsey, the penalties for the four individuals who pled guilty were as follows:

Student one: banished from fraternity court and 15 hours of community service.
Student two: prohibited from participating in May 1999 graduation ceremonies, transcript held until 1 July 1999, banned from campus until 18 December 1999, and responsible for paying full medical costs incurred in treatment of injured party A.
Student three: suspension for spring semester 1999, probation for the remainder of time at PC, and responsible for 25% of medical costs incurred in treatment of an injured party B.
Student four: suspension for spring and fall semesters 1999 and responsible for paying 75% of medical costs incurred in treatment of injured party B.

The seven individuals who pled not guilty were found not guilty as charged.

This same information was released by Griffith in a third memo dated January 13, 1999, that was given to faculty, administrative staff, and the Student Government Association. Griffith also stated in the memo that PC had been served well by the Administrative Judicial Council.

"I believe that [the Council] served the College community at the very highest level of excellence and have brought this matter to conclusion free of bias and with fairness," Griffith wrote.

Griffith also hoped that two clear messages were sent to the college community through the actions of the Administrative Council.

"By appointing this Council, I was trying to send a message that these were an unusual series of cases," said Griffith. "I was also trying to send the message that these types of events would not be tolerated."

While administrators and those who were members of the Administrative Council were pleased with the work the Council did, those involved also stressed the need of the College not to be complacent or ignorant of the problems that this incident has raised.

"It was the best way to handle the situation," said Jon Baggett, senior, of the Administrative Council, of which he was a member. Baggett also serves as the chairman of the regular Judicial Council.

"I think this incident was a bit out of the ordinary," Baggett continued. "I don't think this same thing is going to happen next weekend, but we do need to examine some of the situations that rose up, such as how to handle fraternity court and how to make Public Safety a more effective and sensitive body."

Dr. Booker Ingram, professor of Political Science and another member of the Advisory Council, agreed.

"We have to look at this incident on two different levels," said Ingram. "The various incidents that occurred on December 13, were what I would call triggering events. There were more underlying, systemic problems that rose to the fore as a result of these triggering events. The challenge that now faces us as a community is how to examine these problems of social, cultural and racial differences. I have faith in the people of this community that we can address these problems honestly and openly."

Ms. Shelia Hill, director of Multicultural Affairs and Volunteer Services, also stressed the need for unity through out the PC community.

"The key is in discussing our differences," said Hill. "We're small enough so that's a reality. We want to cultivate a sense of respect and acknowledgement of purpose among all students. Everyone is welcome and without you, our community is incomplete."

To this end of healing the wounds that were created during this incident, Griffith has implemented two measures.

"One is to dispel any rumors or speculation by students as to what happened," said Griffith. "This will in part be accomplished by sending out a statement to all students that summarizes the three memos I sent earlier to faculty and staff. The other measure is creating a committee to discuss some of the problems this situation has brought up."

This second effort is being headed by Hill and will involve faculty, staff and students. During a meeting last Friday, the group adopted the name of Project: Unity. The group's purpose, as Hill and other members of the group put it, is "to get to know each other."

Other efforts at promoting unity are also coming from different groups on campus, such as the Multicultural Student Union (MSU), Westminster Fellowship, FCA, BSU and others.

"In my opinion the situation that occurred was a result of a lack of communication," said senior Rocky Sullivan, president of MSU and another member of the Administrative Council. "Our upcoming programs and workshops are exercises into increasing communication. Everyone is invited and encouraged to come."

Griffith also advocates communication, while at the same time emphasizing responsibility and respect for all students.

"If there was a silver lining to all this it was our people—they were remarkable," he said. "If I have one message to the students it would be this: Along with the privilege of living in a community like PC, comes a responsibility to not only one's own actions, but also the actions of other members. Unless we all understand that need for responsibility and respect we will continue to see the erosion of values that we hold dear to PC."

PC IN BRIEF

Judicial Council tries Honor Code violation

The Judicial Council held a hearing on December 17, 1998 at 8:00pm in Jacobs 108. A student was charged with the Honor Code violation of cheating.

The accused pleaded guilty with mitigating circumstances. The defense presented its case and called no witnesses. The prosecution then presented its case, calling one witness. The defense then was given a chance to present its arguments, the accused spoke on his behalf. Both prosecution and defense then summarized their cases. Following this the Judicial Council went into deliberations.

The Judicial Council returned and imposed the normal penalty, an "F" in the course in which the violation occurred, suspension for the remainder of the Fall 1998 semester and suspension for the Spring 1999 Semester.

With no other business, the Judicial Council was adjourned.

On campus Annual Fund campaign surpasses 60%

What began in September as a goal has now become a reality. In September of 1998, 33% of all full time PC faculty and staff were making a gift or pledge to Presbyterian College. Through December, this number has increased to 63% and is still climbing. You can still participate by sending in a gift by June 30, 1999.

Such tremendous support from those working at PC is significant and sends a strong message to all of PC's constituents. Additionally, it sets the stage for Presbyterian College alumni to try and accomplish the same feat in the "60X2000" campaign -- 60% alumni contributing to PC by the year 2000.

Success for this campaign can be attributed to the hard work of many individuals including Shelia Hill, Dr. John Inman, Norman Scarborough, Beth Couture, Dr. Peter Hobbie, Dr. Ron Dempsey, Andrea Long, Jerry Bron and Dr. Tom Weaver.

Money contributed to the Annual Fund (unrestricted, Scotsman Club and Alumni Scholarships) helps all of us. Gifts to the Annual Fund are used for faculty/staff support, operating budgets, new equipment or books, additional student scholarships and anything else needed on campus.

We appreciate the generosity, involvement and support of so many individuals in this year's campaign. For questions, please contact one of the individuals listed above that were involved in this campaign. For specific fundraising details, contact James Krege, Director of the Annual Fund and Scotsman Club at 833-82361.

Senior Spotlight: Gamble stands out in athletics, service

by Rachel Jernigan
Staff Writer

His favorite color is blue, he has an addiction for greasy food (especially cheeseburgers) and his Sony Playstation and he could become the next NFL superstar. He is senior Troy Gamble.

Gamble has played free safety for the Blue Hose football team for four years. Recently this Due West, South Carolina native was given the opportunity to play in the Division II All Star Football Game, nicknamed the Snow Bowl. He was one of six players chosen from the conference to participate in the event sponsored by the Shriners organization. The non-profit group helps to raise money for disabled children, and the profits made from the Snow Bowl directly supported their cause. Troy originally planned to visit some sick children in a hospital located in Fargo, North Dakota, where the game took place. However, the bad weather prevented him from leaving on time, and as a result, he arrived too late to pay a visit.

Even though he got a late start, Gamble was still able to enjoy the rest of his trip.

"It was a lot of fun and a great experience," said Gamble.

Off the field, he is a Secondary Education major and a member of Pi Kappa Phi fraternity. He also helps with the Big Brother/Big Sister organization in Due West. As to his plans for the future, he has many options. Gamble is currently talking with scouts from both the New England Patriots and the Cleveland Browns. He is also considering playing for the Canadian Football League or pursuing a career as a social studies teacher and coach. Gamble recalls his time spent with his teammates and his Pi Kappa Phi brothers as his most memorable experiences at PC.

"This year's team and season were very special to me. The good times and the friendships that have developed between the other players and myself are things that I'll never forget," he said.

Troy's athletic ability, personality and dedication seem to have impressed PC's own head football coach, Daryl Dickey.

"Troy is an outstanding student athlete who has made significant accomplishments on and off the field," he said.

Inman works in library, students' lives

by Mindy Powers
Staff Writer

As this semester opens, many students will be spending hours in the library beginning to study, do research or prepare projects. Teresa Inman, the head of circulation and inter-library loan at Thomason, is a resource to help these students. Inman has been a member of the Presbyterian College staff since 1982. She began by working one night a week in the library and became a full-time employee in 1988.

Inman was born in Atlanta, GA, where her parents and sister still live. She graduated from PC in 1974 with a degree in Sociology. The Inman family has lived in Clinton since 1980. Her husband, Dr. John Inman, is a biology professor at PC. Inman has three daughters, Shannon, a sophomore at Hanover College in Indiana; Laura, a freshman at Emory and Henry College in Virginia; and Jane, a junior at Clinton High School.

Since spring of 1996, Inman has been working on a master's degree in Library Science and Information Services at the University of South Carolina. She has been taking one class a semester through the distance education program. This program allows students to remain at home and view live broadcasts of lectures via television. It also permits interaction between students using a list serve program over the Internet. Inman travels to Columbia two to three times per semester to meet with the professors and attend classroom lectures. She hopes to finish her master's degree within the next year.

Although the graduate program keeps her very busy, Inman still finds time to attend First Presbyterian Church in Clinton and sing in the church choir. She has also taught Sunday School and participated in the College Connection program. For the past year, the Inmans have been building a house in the area. Since March, Inman has spent most weekends painting the interior. In any free time she can find in her busy schedule, Inman enjoys reading and spending time with her children.

Inman's work in the library brings her in contact with many students. Jennifer Cook, a junior who works in the library, explains that working with Inman is educational and fun.

"Mrs. Inman is a great person to work with," said Cook. "She made it very easy to learn how to do my job and is always willing to help me out when I need it."

Inman has made a big impact on the students of PC by helping them gain access to information and working with them to make the library a more user friendly place.

MSU offers celebration of civil rights leader

by Kathryn Mehl
Staff Writer

January 18, 1999 was a holiday in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. The Multicultural Student Union (MSU) held two events for the Presbyterian College campus to express the true meaning of Martin Luther King, Jr. Day.

The Leadership Team worked with the rest of MSU to brainstorm on types of activities that they could do for Martin Luther King, Jr. Day. They settled on a candlelight service and the viewing of Ghosts of Mississippi. Rodney Sullivan, MSU president, commended the Leadership Team for their dedication.

"The Leadership Team is working really hard all through the campus," said Sullivan. "This was a great year, and next year should be even better. I am so grateful to the Leadership Team because without them I could not be who I am."

The candlelight service was a service to share the ideas of all present on what Martin Luther King, Jr. represents in the lives of today and how his dream is still living in the world even though the man has long been dead.

was to get as many people to participate in the activities as possible," said Sullivan. "The more people participating are equivalent to how many views are expressed. We wanted people for different places and walks of life to shed light on what Martin Luther King, Jr. meant to them. All in all, it was a great success."

The candlelight service was held in front of Neville Hall.

After the candlelight service the participants joined other observers of this holiday in the Charlotte Hawkins Brown Cultural Center to view the movie Ghosts of Mississippi.

"The purpose of showing this particular movie was to show that even at the time of the movie there were still racial lines drawn between sides," said Sullivan. "The goal of MSU is to work towards perfection. We are fighting against ignorance. No one is truly free until everyone is equal. Martin Luther King, Jr. conveyed a great message to the masses. He fought for human rights, not just black rights. He had the audacity to say what many other people were thinking."

MSU is a student organization that wants to unite students throughout the PC campus through their multiculturalism, education and spirituality. They have 25 members, and their advisor is Sherla Hill.

New phone system in effect for students, faculty/staff

The new phone system provides voice mail for faculty and staff.

Data privacy (to keep call waiting tones from interrupting a modem call) is activated by dialing 135, not *70 as was the case on the old system. Many students have programmed *70 in their dialup software.

Call waiting is available on this system. To answer a second call, depress and release the switchhook, and dial #1. To switch between calls, repeat the process. Make sure to hang up on both calls.

Phone numbers remain the same for incoming calls.

Since the college is once again running its own telephone switch, all outgoing calls show up on caller ID devices as the main college number. The same would be the case with collect or 0+ bills.

We regret the conversion glitches and appreciate your patience. The cost of getting the residence halls wired for the campus computer network is less than it would otherwise be because we placed the fiber in the ground when we dug it up for phone lines, saving on labor expenses.

Independent students participate in various weekend activities

by Doodle Harris
Campus Life Editor

According to the Dean of Student's office, forty-seven percent of male students are members of one of the six fraternities on the PC campus, and thirty-nine percent of female students hold sisterhood in one of three sororities. While these students spend their weekends preparing, executing, and participating in theme parties, retreats, formals and general good times, how does the remaining fifty-seven percent of students combat the challenge of entertainment during the weekends?

Of course, the rest of the campus is always welcome to party at fraternity court. According to senior Brent Wigger, a five-year member of Alpha Sigma Phi, his fraternity entertains at least fifty non-fraternity members each week. Freshman Mike Stead agrees.

"We have plenty [of non-members]. There's always a bunch of them," he said.

Various Fraternities also host theme parties such as Pi Kappa Alpha's Toga Party and Apocypse parties, Theta Chi's Dukes of Hazard party and Party in Your Mouth, Alpha Sigma Phi's Hawaiian Party and Southern Exposure, Sigma Nu's Disco Party and all fraternities' various bands and DJ's to attract more people.

Other organizations also provide activities for students who are looking for adventure outside of the Greek life. FCA sponsors weekend trips for students interested in hiking, skating, bowling and a variety of other things. The Student Union Board has recently started showing popular movies on Friday nights in Whitelaw Auditorium.

Religious life

Campus organizations offer students fellowship in Christ

by David McNamara
Staff Writer

Presbyterian College has always been a school that fosters academic as well as religious growth. There is a plethora of Christian groups available on campus in which students can participate. Such groups include the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, the Baptist Student Union, Westminster Fellowship and the Sunday Night Service, among others. Through these organizations, students can attain valuable and useful knowledge of the Christian faith, establish meaningful relationships with peers and faculty and grow closer to the Lord.

The Fellowship of Christian Athletes (FCA) meets every Wednesday evening at 9:00 PM in the Mabry Smith Yonce Center. The group has nearly 100 students in attendance at every meeting. Activities include skits, huddle groups and speakers. Freshman David Ridenhower said that FCA "allows Christians to come together in a unified environment as the body of Christ to grow in faith, encourage each other and reinforce essentials of a personal, real relationship with Christ." Upcoming speakers include the former president of FCA and also the father of PC junior Stephanie Cloud. Also, there will be a concert featuring Wade Jove from Columbia on Feb. 10. For more information on FCA contact Ryan Jenkins or Will McGinty.

The Baptist Student Union (BSU) meets every Thursday evening at 9:00 PM in Crossroads. It is an intimate group with an average of 15 people per meeting. Activities include testimonies, praise songs and speakers.

"BSU is unique, because it is an organization that nurtures a family," said Ridenhower. "We are all in this life

The movies are a success according to SUB.

"We have had over a hundred at every 7:00 movie and every 10:00 movie there's been around fifty," said Shanna McAlister, SUB president.

Also, one or more of the PC sports teams are usually playing at least once over the weekend. Currently, home basketball games are drawing a crowd of at least 1200 people with around 150 PC students. To encourage attendance, students and fans may participate in a drawing for a chance at winning $5000, tee-shirts, Domino's pizza and other prizes.

Students also find entertainment other than the activities offered by PC. The most popular choices include catching up on lost sleep, hanging out with friends and going to the movies.

"When I'm not at the houses, I go to Columbia or Greenville. I go somewhere," said Robert Luhn, senior.

Freshman Pam Munkers suggests "theme dates". She and her friends "dress up like cowboys and go line dancing or dress up like kids and go to the carnival."

Sophomore Christy Lynn Poe and her friends watch "Vegetables," a Bible-based animation series, when the weekends get long and boring.

"I do homework, relax, and...uh...go apple-picking out of the blue," said Wendy Seymour, freshman.

Other students find other ways of passing free time.

"I generally cause mischief when I'm bored," said Ashley Lamar, junior.

Finally, sophomore Roger Harrison takes his girlfriend on dates during weekends. He suggests dating as a popular pastime.

Music provides fun for fans, spirit for players

by Tara Sluder
Staff Writer

As the men warm up on the court and faithful supporters of PC basketball stroll into Templeton, the PC Blue Thunder Pep Band pumps up players and fans alike with catchy jazz and old style rock tunes. Under the direction of Dr. Orval Oleson, head of the music department, members of the Pep Band show up at every home basketball game to cheer on the team.

"We're out there because we want to share some school spirit and encourage the basketball players," said Brent Wiggers, fifth-year senior.

Established a number of years ago by Dr. Oleson, the Pep Band is primarily a jazz ensemble. A variety of instruments are represented in the band, including trombones, trumpets, tubas, bass guitars, a clarinet, a synthesizer, a percussion section, a rhythm section and tenor, alto and baritone saxophones.

The Pep Band consists of about twenty-five members. No auditions are required to join, but it is a half-hour class. The band practiced about six times before the basketball season started, and now they meet only at games.

"Being in the Pep Band is a lot of fun," said Wiggers. "I get to go to the games, which I would do anyway, and make a lot of noise. It's just a good time."

This year's Pep Band is larger and more diverse than the bands in the past. Quite a few freshmen joined the band this year.

"I was never in band in high school," said Doodle Harris, freshman. "I thought I'd try something I'd never done before, and it's fun."

Both the fans and the basketball team members appreciate the Pep Band's support, school spirit and encouragement.

"I'm really excited about this year, and I really appreciate all the support that the Pep Band gives us," said Chris League, assistant basketball coach.

Some fans wish the band would play at more than just the men's games.

"The Pep Band adds a lot to the game, but I think they should play at some of the some of the women's games, too," said Katie Moore, sophomore.

The Pep Band, indeed, plans to play at several of the upcoming lady's games. Oleson would even like for the Pep Band to play at the football games in the fall.

The band plays jazz, swing and some oldies. The audience enjoys such numbers as "Sweet Georgia Brown," "You Can Call Me Al," "Eye Of The Tiger" and "YMCA."

One regret that Harris expressed was that the band is not allowed to play during the game.

"It would be nice to be able to play while the opposing team is trying to make a foul shot," said Harris.

The cheerleaders and the dance team often dance to the music provided by the Pep Band.

"The band helps get everybody going," said cheerleader Susan Freeman, freshman. "They play the fight song and other songs that we can dance to."

Team members also enjoy the encouragement the band provides.

"All the guys on the team really appreciate the band," said team member Byron Graham, senior. "Not a lot of colleges have a Pep Band. When you're warming up and hear the band playing, you get fired up and ready to play."

Blue Hose baseball hoping to match last year's record

by Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

Presbyterian College baseball has a lot of expectations to fill this year after their record breaking season led last year by Coach Kovash. Last year's squad won the SAC Conference Title for the first time in their history, and took it one step further to be selected to play in the Regionals. Last year, the team played the Regionals in St. Petersburg, FL and were one of the four teams left in the tournament when they lost to Florida Southern, 5-7. Last season, the team also ended with a 40-20 record overall and an impressive 15-3 in the SAC Conference. Their final ranking was 20.

"We had an outstanding season last year and I will always look on that season with fond memories. This season, our team goals are to repeat conference champs and we would like to go further in the region. All of the players have been playing hard in practice, and try to leave the field a better team every day with the World Series on their minds for this year," said Kovash.

The team lost three of its key players from last season whose spaces will have to be filled this year. Klay Hall, last year's starting centerfielder, was named Player of the Year as well as Male Athlete of the Year. Gobbel, short stop, and Patrick, both four year starters and letter winners have spots that will need to be stepped into this season.

This season, the team appears strong with 16 returning letter-winners and six returning starters. The three senior captains will be looked to this season for great ball playing and senior leadership. Senior Roger Foltynowicz will be returning as the 3rd baseman. This 6'1" All-Region player will not only be looked to for great defense, but also for power hitting. Foltynowicz hit an outstanding nine homers last season. Also, 6'0" Ross Mundy will be looked to in a variety of positions. He sees time as catcher, designated hitter, and first baseman. He also was named an All-Region player last season. Senior Brad Boleman saw time as a left fielder last season, but this season, Kovash is looking to try out Boleman's skills as the second baseman.

In the pitching line-up, All-Conference pitcher Jeremy Joyner will probably be the #1 pitcher for this season. Joyner, Junior, had 3.90 ERA last season and also, along with Sophomore Mike Noble, won 8 games last season. Noble and Joyner achieved a joint school record last year winning 8 games apiece. Three lefties will help out the pitching staff this season with Noble, 6'2" sophomore Matt Martunas, and 6'3" sophomore Kevin Felts who was named a member of the All-Tournament Team in the SAC Conference Tournament last year who ended the season with a 3.84 ERA.

"I feel good about this year's team. We have a lot of talent and motivation. The team is excited about the season, and that shows in the practices," Kovash said.

The Blue Hose season begins on Friday, February 5 at Lincoln Memorial University in Tennessee.

Lady Blue Hose

Softball team looks forward to promising spring season

by Jeremy Carl
Staff Writer

Under the leadership of first year coach Buster Sturkie the women's softball team will open the 1999 season against Armstrong College on Feb. 16. Last year the team finished third in the South Atlantic Conference with a record of 31-16.

The Blue Hose consist of twelve returning players, eight of which are returning starters, and six freshmen who will add great depth to the team. Returning players include senior Shannon Seigler, senior Mackenzie Bertram, junior Angie Mullins, sophomore Monica Choplin, sophomore Sonya McNeil, sophomore Christi Smith, sophomore Ross Stewart, sophomore Alison Outz, sophomore Jaime Carter and sophomore Nicole Goodwin. This year's freshmen include Jennifer Henderson, Beth Pearson, Amanda Williamson, Sherri Sullivan, Mandy Springs and Gwen Shealy.

Several of PC's returning players received individual awards last year and the team only lost two key players. Last year Seigler, McNeil, Goodwin, Choplin and Carter made the all conference team. Sonya McNeil also made the all-region team with a batting average of .533. The Blue Hose did lose first basemen Rachel Bishop and outfielder Lauren Axson.

"[Ross] Stewart has the potential of being an all conference player this year," said Coach Sturkie.

Sturkie knows that the 1999 schedule will be tough.

"With a longer schedule than last year I hope our team can play consistently well each game," said Sturkie. "I also hope that our play will put us in a position to win the conference."

The team's pitching game should show improvement this season.

"Beth Pearson [pitcher] will give us a bigger and stronger pitching staff," said Coach Sturkie.

The freshmen will also be an asset.

"My freshmen have put forth alot of good work in practice," said Coach Sturkie.

The Blue Hose will play Armstrong College, Kennesaw State University, Valdosta State University and Carson-Newman College, which were all ranked in the top 15 in the nation last year.

Men's basketball team wins tournament, faces challenges at home

by Jeff Walker

Imagine great weather, a beautiful beach and snorkeling. This is what the men's basketball team did over Christmas Break. The team went to the Bahamas to play in the Nassau Sunshine Shootout. The Blue Hose enjoyed their trip by winning the Nassau Tournament.

In the first game against Tabor, PC got out to an 11 point halftime lead and won the game 65-60. D.J. Humphries and Eric Burrow each scored in double figures while Jason Cochcroft, Byron Graham and Kevin Campbell each scored nine points. One final scoring burst by Tabor was not enough as PC's defense made Tabor turnover the ball 19 times.

The Blue Hose played a defensive game against Concordia in the championship game. With Concordia leading the Blue Hose 22-21 at halftime, PC's defense held Concordia to 13 second half points en route to a 47-35 win. Campbell and Graham each scored ten points while Burrow had nine points and three blocked shots. The defense held Concordia to 31 percent shooting for the game while they committed 16 turnovers.

"The Bahamas were nice," said head coach Gregg Nibert. "The defense played well the whole tournament and we were able to win a tough defensive matchup against Concordia."

PC defeated archival Newberry 72-56 on January 2. The Blue Hose held Newberry to 16 total first half points and a 26 percent field goal shooting. Graham poured in 18 points and Burrow had 14 points with 11 rebounds. PC shot 54 percent for the game while hitting eight three-pointers.

The Blue Hose traveled to Wingate, North Carolina to take on twenty-four ranked and first in the Region Wingate. PC came back from a seven point deficit at halftime but could not pull it out, losing 53-48. Cochcroft and Yahnick Martin led the team with nine points apiece. Wingate's Brandon Harris scored 25 points and grabbed nine rebounds.

"The problem we had with this game was not getting the ball inside to our post players, and we committed 16 turnovers," said Nibert.

Right before classes started for the second semester, the Blue Hose played a tough Carson-Newman team at Templeton Gym. PC played a tight game, but Carson-

Newman sneaked out of Clinton with a 57-55 win. Cochcroft led the team with 13 points while Martin and Campbell poured in with eight points a piece. Burrow stood in the paint and grabbed eight rebounds and blocked three shots.

PC got back on track by defeating Mars Hill 65-51 on January 13. PC outscored Mars Hill by eight each half to win by 16. PC committed only nine turnovers while the defense forced 13 turnovers. Brad Westbrook led the team with 15 points while Cochcroft and Burrow each scored 13 and 12 points respectively.

Cochcroft came off the bench to score 19 points and help the Blue Hose defeat Lenoir-Rhyne 71-61. Burrow led the team with 20 points and Graham helped with 16 points. PC shot 52 percent from the floor while hitting six three pointers.

According to Nibert, the Blue Hose played one of the best games in Nibert's era against Catawba. PC was down 30-18 at halftime and down by 11 with six minutes left in the game when PC went on a run and won the game 54-51. PC dressed only eight players for the game. Graham, Burrow, Mac Harper, and Westbrook were out with injuries and illness. Graham came back and scored 15 points, while Humphries helped with 10 points. Cochcroft came off the bench to score nine points.

"This has been one of the best games I have ever been a part of," said Nibert. "The team never stopped showing character and played tough throughout the game."

The Blue Hose jumped all over Gardner-Webb Saturday night with an 80-72 win. PC broke the all-time record for three pointers with 15. Cochcroft came off the bench and scored 27 points and hit seven three-point field goals. Graham also scored 18 points. Burrow scored 12 points but came down with a game high 15 rebounds. PC shot 58 percent from the three-point line.

Graham is leading the team with 13.6 points per game. Burrow is averaging 11.3 points per game and 10 rebounds per game. Humphries is averaging 10.1 points per game while averaging 7 rebounds per game.

PC NEWS IN BRIEF

BUYER BEWARE: PC SWIMMING POOL

A recent audit by Dr. Lipford's microeconomics class revealed that the PC swimming pool is costing an estimated $32 million to maintain. If that is too big a number for you to comprehend, let us put it this way...47% of your tuition goes to pool maintenance. In its defence, the pool, which is the oldest in South Carolina, said, "The older the berry, the sweeter the juice." An anonymous professor, one of two known users of the pool had this to say in light of the recent audit. "I'm the only one ping in here, so why do they have to use so much chlorine?"

PC "ONE UPS" NATION

Once again, PC proves why it is so, so good. PC has raised the bar for the rest of the nation by giving 3 weeks off of classes to students for Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday. While on their vacation, students also celebrated Christmas and New Year's. An Administrator said, "We did this to show our never-ending commitment to African-American heritage. This is why 97% of our students are white."

Psychology department uses new instrument to see Public Safety Officers' dreams.

DR. WEAVER RETIRES

After ten years of outstanding service in the PC Political Science Department, Dr. Thomas Weaver has announced his retirement. Ever since the beginning of December, students have noticed a look of frustration on his face. Dr. Weaver commented on his retirement by saying, "I'm retiring because it's way too cold to smoke outside up here." Weaver is expected to move to Florida.

PC CRIME REPORT

-A green Eastpack bookbag was reported stolen by Mikeal Bailey last week. "I just left it in GDH, and it's not there now," said Mikeal. The bookbag was said to contain a psychology book, a spanish book, "some" gum and $5,000 in the "secret" pocket. "If you have seen my bookbag, borrowed it or 'accidentally' picked it up, I would like to hear about it," pleaded Mikeal.

VERY BAD WEEK FOR TRAY-VATOR

-Monday: Sterling silver fork falls from tray and stabs dish washer.

-Tuesday: A sensitive nosed Eco-mug dealer got tired of Molly the Dog's unapproachable scent, and they threw her down the Tray-Vator to get washed. Molly suffered a broken face.

-Friday: After 56 years of faithful service to the Clinton Community, the Tray-Vator filled up with food. "I knew that hole had to fill up with food sometime...It's pretty deep though. It must be because of all those napkins," said Mrs. Forester.

Strategic plan, budget awaiting Board approval

by Kay Owen
Editor-in-Chief

The Board of Trustees will be on campus Feb. 25-26 to discuss college business and give final approval to the strategic plan and 1999-2000 fiscal budget for the college.

The strategic plan vision has been unanimously endorsed by the PC's faculty and staff, the Student Government Association and the officers and directors. Dr. John V. Griffith, president, also introduced the budget to each of these groups for review and understanding. The presentation of the budget is a new precedent. Griffith plans for it to be the first of an annual event. The groups were not to pass approval or take action concerning the budget. They were meant to see the division of money to different aspects of the college and understand the process by which that money is allocated.

"It is important that the people who pay for the budget, the students and the people who work here understand the finances," said Griffith.

Tuition increases each year as a general rule. For students and faculty to comprehend this phenomenon, viewing the budget was a way to explain how and why money is spent and where it goes.

The budget development process began late in the fall of 1998. It was initiated by the academic dean and was presented to the faculty. Traditionally, as with this year, the final version will be passed by the Board in late January.

One new addition to the 1999-2000 budget is a technology fee of $100 to be paid by all students. The fee may be decreased proportionally for off-campus or part-time students. That factor has not yet been determined. During the past five years, many other schools have adopted this aspect of tuition. For PC, it will support new technologies and capacities, both permanent and projected. The fee will be one-half debt service (to cover the new infrastructure already being constructed for the residence halls) and one-half support services and maintenance.

Griffith is pleased with the budget that will be proposed to the Board of Trustees.

"Budgets are difficult in that you always wish there was more to go around," he said. "This is a wonderful place. I wish there was more for compensation of especially great professors and workers, but I think this is a good budget. It will continue to support what we have. It is also very tight. A close study brings out the point of having a larger endowment to do things we want to do. Also, growing in the size of the institution is important."

Increased endowment and size are some of the vision goals of the strategic plan. Also included in the vision is a priority of improving multicultural objectives and improving faculty-student relations. These elements are key for creating a liberal arts environment in which students may obtain the best education possible.

"I think the whole strategic plan is designed to make us more competitive by making you [students] more competitive and increasing the power of your education," said Griffith.

Part II: Accomplishing the Vision is to be approved. It has not yet been set on a timeline, but the basic ideas for change and improvement are present. Griffith believes the Board will embrace the plan and give the college approval to move ahead.

"From a process standpoint, we're where I'd hoped we'd be," he said. "The fact that the plan has been endorsed by all three factions makes me very happy. It reflects the work of so many faculty and students. When we got to the Board meeting, I feel I will go in with the support of the college family."

When the Board of Trustees arrives Feb. 25 they will receive an agenda packet. The packet will outline the itinerary for the two-day meeting. The first day will be spent in committees, such as academic, student activities, development, finance, construction, etc. The focus will be on an overview of the entire session as well as a look at the implications for different committees. In the following plenary session, the committees will bring in their reports, then the motion for adoption will be made.

Winter Conference

Students return with varied opinions on annual event

Campus Life Editor

On Friday evening, January 31, a caravan of seventy people, including faculty, their families and 46 students left for Black Mountain to participate in PC's annual Winter Conference. This year's conference was organized by Chaplain Greg Henley who invited guest speakers Chris Wren and Susan Heatfield. Each year a large group of faculty and students attend the retreat to examine their Christian faith and hopefully gain a better understanding of God and their role as a Christian.

Dr. Wren is a pastor of the United Reformed Church of Great Britain as well as a citizen of Great Britain. He writes poems and hymns which are published in hymnals across various countries including several hymns in recent Presbyterian Hymnals. Wren strives to write hymns from the twentieth century perspective. His wife and partner in ministry is Rev. Heatfield, an ordained Methodist minister and native of Montana. Together, they presented three programs throughout the weekend, titled "Peace Together Praise" as well as leading worship service Sunday morning.

Worship service on Sunday morning was one of the most creative services that I've ever attended," said Henley. "The point of the weekend was that in order to hear the gospel in the culture in which we live, we really have to listen."

Katy Lamar, the hymn and the service was very motivating, but lacked college level appeal in some aspects.

"I was really inspired by the couple that led us and their partnership on marriage and ministry," said Lamar. "They were a great example of working together in Christ. However, we weren't extremely enchanted with their message, and then songs were cheesy."

Sophomore Carrie Simpson really enjoyed the music.

"I think music is really important to worship" she said. "It was meaningful because they talked about the words. I like their creativity and passion as speakers."

Ashley Lamar, junior, was also entertained. "I liked the little man's English accent" said Lamar.

Also included in the weekend's activities were several opportunities for social interaction.

"I liked the square dance," said Luke Ellis, sophomore.

Ellis was referring to Friday night's activity. What started as a square dancing evolved into a more contemporary line dancing, but Henley called the evening a success.

On Saturday night the group also participated in the traditional "ice cream orgy" in which everyone was invited to make the most outrageous ice cream sundae and enjoy each other's company.

The faculty were the first in line [for the ice cream], they always are," said Henley.

Following the ice cream was a talent show. About sixteen acts participated and the talent ranged from singing and playing instruments to telling knock knock jokes.

It was neat to see all the hidden acts come out of everyone," said Lamar.

Others also agreed that they found the weekend fun and beneficial.

It was wonderful to get away for a weekend and have fellowship with a nice group of people," said Mary Pat Adams.

My favorite part was just hanging out with people and doing nature things like going on walks," said Jay Howell, sophomore.

"Just don't go hiking alone," warned Ellis. "You may get lost."

In addition and conclusion to the weekend, Wren and Heatfield presented a convocation at PC on Monday morning, Feb. 5. Again Wren presented some of his music and poetry as he discussed five ways for people to become closer to God.

"We really should feel honored to have a nationally acclaimed hymn-writer with us" said organ professor, Dr. Karen Elshelman.

The PC choir sang and other students also participated in skits during the convocation.

POINT

Student behavior at CEP disgraces us all

The Blue Stocking would like to applaud the attention spans of a number of students, particularly those who have nothing better to do on a Friday night than embarrass their school.

At a recent piano recital, certain students, some of whom were dressed in the finest "wife-beater" undershirt attire, talked in a loud, disrespectful manner and snored throughout the performance. Congratulations on acting like children instead of adults!

Seriously though, such behavior is a poor reflection on us all. These students embarrassed PC, the performer, prospective students in the audience and themselves. If you attend a CEP and cannot treat the performers and/or speakers with respect, then do not go. Remember too that disrupting CEP's in this manner is a violation of the Code of Conduct and is punishable by the Judicial Council. Many students may not be aware that their actions are under the jurisdiction of the Code, but disruptive behavior is explicitly defined in the Code of Conduct we all signed. We are on our honor to behave and bring this institution and its guests the integrity and respect they deserve.

A Blue Stocking "atta boy" to Dr. J. Porter Stokes for stepping up to the plate and demanding students take responsibility for their behavior. It is reasonable to think that others of us on campus should also take measures to ensure that our education is taken seriously and that our institution is respected throughout our community and elsewhere.

If students have reasonable concerns or complaints about the CEP's themselves or the way the program is run, take steps to correct it rather than act irresponsibly. It is fruitless to complain and take no action. Please, just do so in a proper and mature manner.

Colleges must ensure competitive education

Editor's note: This column is the first of what will be a regular column by President Griffith to be printed in The Blue Stocking. It originally ran in The State.

High school seniors across the nation are deciding which colleges they will apply to and, once accepted, will attend. This fact is very much on my mind as I watch the admission picture unfold for the 20,000 students who have expressed interest in Presbyterian College. I marvel that by next fall, I will be addressing at matriculation 300 outstanding freshmen we feel are just right for PC.

Having served as a dean of admissions for six years at a highly selective institution, and having gone through the college choice process with my own two sons, I can say with a healthy dose of certainty that getting from here to there is not an exact science. One might even be tempted to say it is a somewhat irrational undertaking, guided by adolescent whim, parents' desires to win in the high-stakes game of financial aid, institutional efforts to enroll the best and balance their budgets and legislators' efforts to win elections by handling students' free tickets to the good life.

But I worry that all is not well with the admissions/financial aid game in America. My worries are intensified as our state Legislature and governor gear up to address the need for higher quality education at all levels for the citizens of South Carolina.

When I was a senior in high school I looked at a number of schools with my father. He was a college administrator who did not make a great deal of money. He and my mother, who also worked, saved for years so that they could help send their four children to college. Each of us was required to work in the summer, beginning in ninth grade, to save for our educations.

I remember wanting a car, but being told we couldn't have one because all our extra money was going to the "education fund." There were no federal funds for which the four of us qualified. My parents made just "a little too much" money. There were no state lotteries or video poker revenues to help them and me with the cost of education.

My parents had always told me that I should try to get into the very best college possible; they would see to it that the finances worked out. I found a college I liked, applied for early decision, fretted that I would be rejected, and was accepted. The four years of college were the best years of my life.

I worked every summer to help pay for my education and served as a residence hall advisor to cover room and board during my junior and senior years. I got my first car the summer before my senior year. It was an eight-year-old Peugeot.

I know my parents sacrificed a great deal to send my siblings and me to college. They told us it was the greatest gift they could give us. There were right, and I think of the education my wife and I provide our two children in the same way. In fact, I have told them it is the greatest gift they will receive from us. My younger son commented recently that it is sort of a funny gift in that he is helping pay for it. But that is part of the gift, having to work hard for something helps you cherish it all the more.

I am concerned about what we are doing to higher education in America and those whom it is designed to serve. First, we have convinced ourselves that it is too expensive, that we should not have to sacrifice anything to educate our children and that someone else ought to pay. And yet, many college-going students in this state drive a car whose cost rivals the price tag of a year or more of tuition at one of our public or private colleges.

Second, we encourage our legislators to support legislation that will place ever-increasing dollars directly in the hands of students, without regard to the ability of those students' families to pay for the education. Georgia has done this with the Hope scholarship funded by the Georgia lottery.

On the surface this looks wonderful. It is making higher education virtually tuition-free for all Georgia students, and more Georgia students are staying in-state for college—one of the goods. I like this program a great deal for families who really can't afford to educate their children. But a year's tuition at a public college in Georgia is about $3,000, a new car can cost $30,000. Even families who can afford to pay cash for the new car get the $3,000.

The problem is that programs like this result in all students settling for a lesser quality education. How? Because there simply is not enough money to go around. Money placed in the hands of students who can afford to pay will not be used to attract and retain world-class faculty, build nationally competitive computer systems, expand library acquisitions or simply provide for the ongoing operating needs of everything from the chemistry laboratory to the theatre department.

For the first time in over 100 years the South is economically competitive with other parts of the country. It is about time that we compete in terms of the quality of education. In order to do this, we must first make it possible for all students who desire a first-quality education to achieve one.

South Carolina has very strong student assistance programs designed to make it possible for students to choose a public or private college. Keeping this program strong should be our first priority.

Our next focus should be a lottery to generate revenues for supporting the operational requirements of first-quality education and a needs test to determine who most needs lottery-generated funds.

Letters

Student apologises for violating Honor Code

Editor's Note: The following letter was written directly to President Griffith and is being presented to the campus as a public apology as a part of the Judicial Council penalties for an Honor Code violation.

Dear Dr. Griffith,

I am writing you an apology for taking one of the maugral flags from the West Plaza over Fall Break. I was not thinking with a clear head and did not think of all the problems that would arise for you and the college. I am deeply sorry for the trouble this has caused you and your staff. Also, I hope that all the trouble is over now that you have both of the flags back in your possession. Once again I am truly sorry and hope that you and the college can forgive me for what I have done.

Sincerely,
T.J. McMahan

Junior disagrees with change in financial aid policy

Editor's note: In response to Lancet's letter, Mike Rosolino, Director of Residence Life, wrote a letter to her explaining the Resident Hall Association's position on the matter and placed her name on the townhouse waiting list.

I am writing this letter in response to the recent financial changes concerning the townhouses. I am a junior and had full intentions of living at the townhouses my senior year with three other girls. The four of us and our parents were excited that we were going to have this opportunity. Needless to say, I was crushed when the applications came out and I found out that the girls I would be living with had scholarships that would not cover their housing costs if they lived in a townhouse. The day we received the application, we spoke to someone in financial aid and were told that this policy had been set in stone and that we could not complain to anyone. Due to this information, we did not submit an application for the townhouses.

After reading last edition of the Blue Stocking and speaking to both Judi Gillespie and Mike Rosolino, I found out that this policy had been changed again and the girls' scholarships would cover the living expenses they needed to Student thanks campus for concern, thoughtfulness

Dear Faculty, Staff and Fellow Students of PC,

I would love to thank each one of you personally for all the prayers, cards and calls given to me during my recent illness while studying abroad, but it would be next to impossible to return the grand scale of kindness. I hope you will accept this letter in The Blue Stocking and know that I am speaking to each one of you directly. I cannot even begin to express how warm and loved I felt to receive the support of the Presbyterian College family. Each one of the cards sent to me made me realize that I am truly blessed to have friends like you. I never had a doubt in my mind that PC was the place for me to extend my education, but I have been richly rewarded in ways beyond textbook information and simple academics. I have been shown love and support, kindness and concern and the true meaning of "community."

As far as my illness goes, I have recovered from the endocarditis and am currently regaining strength and endurance in Orlando, Florida. On February 19 I will undergo open heart surgery in order to repair the holes in my heart and possibly reconstruct a valve, if necessary. Recovery from this procedure is expected to be approximately six to eight weeks, at which point I should be perfectly healthy and able to do any physical activity.

I ask for your continued prayers not only for my health, but also for the doctors and surgeons' wisdom. Thank you again for all your kindness and prayers. I do not think I would have made it without your love.

In Him,
Laura L. Harris

Third, both public and private institutions of higher learning should put new revenues into developing first-quality programs so that all of our students, including the very brightest, will want to stay in state. We do them a terrible disservice to entice them with free or nearly free educations that are not nationally competitive.

Finally, we—secondary schools, parents and colleges—need to stop thinking of our young people as commodities whose grade-point averages and SAT scores translate into a certain amount of money for education. This results in a shopping mentality without regard to the quality of education and a greatly inflated notion of the financial assistance to which students are entitled.

We need public policy and institution based management policies that assure higher education is financially accessible to all individuals who desire it and are willing to work for it.

At the same time, we need dollars flowing to teachers, operating budgets and facilities to make sure that the education our people obtain is nationally competitive.

And finally, we must be sure that the students leave college ready to serve their families, churches, workplaces and communities free from the self-serving attitude that they are owed something because of who they are.

These are the issues we wrestle with at PC; it is the stance I believe we should take in higher education throughout the United States.

PC IN BRIEF

Judicial Council announces Honor Code penalty

The Judicial Council held a hearing on January 18, 1999 at 7:00pm in Harrington-Peachtree Amphitheatre. A student was charged with the Honor Code violation of stealing.

The accused pleaded guilty with mitigating circumstances. The defense presented its case and called no witnesses. The prosecution then presented its case, calling one witness. The defense then was given a chance to present its arguments, and the accused spoke on his behalf. Both prosecution and defense then summarized their cases. Following this the Judicial Council went into deliberations.

The Judicial Council returned and delivered a deviated penalty. The accused was sentenced to 100 hours of community service and was ordered to write a letter of apology to Dr. Griffith and the student body. The letter to the student body is to be published in the Blue Stocking.

Religious attitudes vary on campus

by Tara Sluder
Staff Writer

With all the religious implications placed on an institution labeled as "Presbyterian," what do students and faculty actually think about the religious atmosphere on campus? As with any issue, there exist many different views.

"I think PC does better than any other college I know in providing students, faculty and staff many opportunities to openly explore important issues of faith, values and service," said Bob Bryant, professor of religion. "Our general education requirement that every student take an introductory survey course in both the Old and New Testaments facilitates a great deal of openness and sharing in religious matters—both in and out of the classroom."

Some students have a different view of the requirements.

"PC is definitely based on Christian values, but I think in a way it's strayed from the truth and incidentally tried to become more politically correct," said Katie Moore, sophomore. "Some of the professors in the religion department seem scared to teach the truth and tend to dance around the issues."

The campus offers a plethora of "religious" organizations with which to become involved. Included are such groups as Baptist Student Union (BSU), Fellowship of Christian Athletes (FCA), Westminster Fellowship (WF), Canterbury Club, Newman Club and others.

"I think PC students find a rich environment here to construct a faith that is meaningful and authentic," said Dr. Greg Henley, Chaplain.

Sara Simpson, moderator of WF, says students have various beliefs but are sometimes reluctant to share them.

"I think that PC is a fairly open-minded, or at the very least, tolerant community, but I know that students who struggle with what they believe don't always feel comfortable vocalizing it and sometimes feel like they are doing something wrong," said Simpson.

Students involved in the different religious organizations on campus indicate a significant amount of spiritual growth and fellowship, but also express a desire for more unity between the different groups and the campus in general.

"I think that it is possible for us to work together efficiently, but I don't think we have really reached that point of unity," said John Paul Sellars, President of BSU.

Brooke Blankinship, senior, agrees.

"I think the campus is spiritually divided," said Blankinship. "In one corner there are the 'pariahs,' and in the other corner are the 'religious people.'"

Many efforts are being made, particularly this semester, to unify everyone on campus. The thirty-six hour prayer vigil is an upcoming event that involves the whole PC community in praying for our school.

Rebekah Abel, junior, thought of the idea of a prayer vigil. A committee of about four students is heading the event.

"It seemed like a good idea to have something like this right now since the campus is talking about unity," said Abel. "The purpose of the prayer vigil is to bring the whole campus together for the common goal of praying for our campus."

Students will take turns praying for 30 minute intervals in the chapel for a total of thirty-six hours, and a prayer walk will end the vigil. Participants in the walk will stop at various points on campus and pray for different aspects of the college. Dr. Griffith will end the walk with a scripture reading and prayer on the intramural field.

PC's rich Christian background continues to encourage students and faculty to unify in order to maintain the principles on which it was founded.

"I do not believe that PC has relativized or abandoned its great Christian heritage, particularly its Presbyterian orientation which helps give PC its distinctive character as a great Christian liberal arts college," said Bryant.

Springs fitness center gains student approval

Editor's Note: This report was compiled by Natalie Massie. It was submitted to The Blue Stocking by Bryan Madden.

During the summer of 1998, the staff at Presbyterian College's Springs Campus Center completely renovated the outdated fitness center on the third floor. This fall, returning students were excited to find an expanded and more efficient place to exercise on campus. This is something that PC has needed for many years. Comparable liberal arts schools in South Carolina, such as Furman and Wofford, have provided excellent fitness centers for their students, and it was time for Presbyterian to do the same. This is definitely something that will impress prospective students on upcoming campus visits.

Not only has the fitness center expanded to include all of the open areas on the third floor of Springs Campus Center, but it is also staffed four days of the week. Students staff the fitness center Sunday through Thursday from 4:00 to 10:00 p.m. They help fellow students, professors and staff members use the aerobic or resistance training equipment and can provide "Training Diaries" to monitor their progress. These "Training Diaries" can be kept in a file cabinet conveniently located beside the staff desk. The student workers also provide clean towels and help to keep the fitness center clean. The fitness center is also open for use during the campus center's normal hours: Sunday 1:30-10:00 p.m., Monday through Thursday 7:30 a.m.-10:00 p.m., Friday 7:30 a.m.-9:00 p.m. and Saturday 9:00 a.m.-9:00 p.m. Most of those regularly using the fitness center can find these to be convenient hours for them to exercise.

To make all of these improvements, Presbyterian College had to spend thousands of dollars on equipment. However, they did manage to save about $30,000 by purchasing used equipment at a reduced rate. For about $40,000 worth of resistance training equipment by Cybex Eagle Fitness Systems (c) PC only had to spend $12,600. All of this equipment is in excellent condition and was an outstanding bargain. Two new treadmills were purchased for a sum of $3,000 each. A used bicycle ergometer was purchased for $2,500. In addition, spring water is bought in five gallon bottles at a total estimated cost of approximately $1,000 per year. Finally, the small exercise towels cost a total of $500. All this adds up to a total sum of approximately $19,600.

The new equipment that was brought in over the summer months joined the few pre-existing machines in the fitness center. Seven Stairmasters (c), a rowing ergometer machine and an Airdyn (c) stationary bicycle were present from previous years. An Ab Roller (c) and two panel mats have been available for abdominal exercise. Finally, a physicians' scale, a fan and a 19-inch television are provided as accessory items.

To assess how students and staff members at Presbyterian College were using the new Springs Fitness Center, those exercising during one particular week were asked to anonymously complete questionnaires. For simplicity, it is assumed that those filling out questionnaires correctly represent the demographics using the fitness center. Sixteen point one percent of the respondents were male and the other 83.9% were female.

In order to continue to update the fitness center most effectively, it is essential that Presbyterian College know the exercise goals of its students. The answer given most often was that people were trying to "tone". That is that they wanted to decrease the percentage of body fat while gaining lean muscle mass. Not surprisingly, the next most common response was the goal of "losing" body weight or fat. Among college-aged females, the majority of the respondents to the questionnaire, there is a high incidence of eating disorders and usually a strong desire to be thin. This explains their goal of trying to lose weight. Next, people said they were exercising in order to "maintain physical fitness or current weight". This reflects well on this group of respondents. They are satisfied with their current weight and wish to maintain basic health through exercise as recommended by numerous doctors. "Gain[ing] muscle mass" was the next most popular training effect desired. This group, remarkably, was not limited to the male respondents, as expected. Several females also indicated their desire to accumulate more muscle mass. Next, four students, two females and two males, indicated that they were "training for a specific sport or activity". Programs such as the PC dance team, cheerleading squad, ROTC and weight training classes will periodically use the resources at Springs Fitness Center to help in their training. All programs on campus are welcome to utilize the equipment as needed. Finally, two students indicated in the "other" category that they exercise to relieve stress. The number, in reality, is probably much higher than reported. Many doctors recommend exercise as a way to reduce stress.

In order to gain these exercise goals, these people should be working out about three days a week. This was also studied by the questionnaires. The responses indicated that most of the people using the fitness center did so regularly. Most said that they used the equipment at Springs three or more times a week. Only nine respondents said they used the center two times per week or less.

The most popular day to work out was Monday, with an average over two months to be 38 people per day. This was followed closely by Wednesday (average of 37), Tuesday (average of 36) and Thursday (average of 34). Thus, most students work out only during the week and take their rest days on the weekend. Friday and Sunday both averaged 16 people per day, while Saturday only averaged six people exercising each day. The average over two months show that about 183 people work out at the fitness center each week.

The next question was, "What equipment do you usually use during a workout?" Because of the large number of people trying to tone and gain muscle mass, most of the respondents indicated that they usually use the weight machines. The next most popular piece of equipment was the treadmill, followed by the Stairmasters (c), Ab Roller (c), dumbbells and stationary bikes (in that order).

Respondents were also asked to write down any other exercise equipment that they would like to see added to the Springs Fitness Center. Many said that they would like to have magazines to read while exercising. Already the staff at the fitness center has ordered subscriptions to Shape, Runner's World, Elle and Sports Illustrated. Other magazines have been placed in racks for exercisers to use now. Many said that they would like to see more dumbbells brought into the workout rooms. This has also been done already as three more sets of weights have been added to the equipment at Springs. Other requests for elliptical stairmasters, more treadmills, an adductor/abductor resistance machine and an adjustable bench for sit-ups and dumbbell curls came in the same proportions. Finally, people asked for hand weights to use while walking on the treadmills, a twist machine for abdominal obliques, a calf machine, a lateral pulldown machine and a chin-up bar.

The general consensus is that the updated Springs Fitness Center is a huge improvement. Students are happy with the changes and continue to work out to stay healthy.

Senior Spotlight: Ewell looks ahead to early graduation, art career

by Doodle Harris
Campus Life Editor

"I'm nearly laid-back about everything," said Kate Ewell.

Kate, senior, is an art major, a psychology minor and an expert at just hating out with her friends.

Kate, a Halls, Tennessee native, ranks family first and friends second when prioritizing her life.

"My family is definitely above all," she said. "They're the most important thing to me."

Kate has two older sisters, a younger brother and very supportive parents. She also loves her friends as if they were her family.

"In the end, I could major in art or accounting - what I'm going to remember [about PC] is my friends," she says.

In particular, she loves to beat her buddies at pool and spend time in Moorefield house.

For this self-professed introvert, art is how Kate communicates with the world.

"Art is an outlet for me. It's a way to express myself and get out my emotions. Art is a powerful instrument and I want to use it," she said. "My parents always said do what makes you happy, and I couldn't imagine majoring in anything else or doing anything else that would make me as happy."

Last year, Kate took the third-world countries class and went to Honduras.

"The Honduras trip was definitely a really significant event in my life...I'd seen the poverty and heard about it in the U.S., but I didn't understand why it happened," said Kate. "[The trip] opened my heart to other people, not just in other countries, but in the U.S. as well."

The trip inspired Kate to create a series of watercolors titled "Scenes in Honduras" which will be part of her senior art display in April. She started the paintings because she "couldn't tell people what it was like, but [she] could paint what it like."

The twenty-one year old declares that she absolutely cannot survive without her bed and her V8 juice. Her hobbies include running and decorating the Moorefield house. Suprisingly, she genuinely likes the food at GDH.

By taking a full load of classes, she will graduate from PC after only three years of study in May. In the next couple of years, she hopes to relax and stay in this area of the country.

For Kate, "[graduating] is exciting and scary because there aren't a lot of opportunities."

"What I would really like to do is get work for an artist somewhere," Kate said.

In ten years, Kate hopes to find herself "enjoying life...maybe be married. I hope to have a career that I love...I don't know."

Kate's friends describe her as energetic, optimistic and a shopaholic. Her friends and roommates in Moorefield house, Alicia Weeber, Patti Carson, Lane Jeselnik and Alison Bragan, were eager to take time and give the inside scoop on Kate.

"She seems really reserved, but she has a sarcastic sense of humor," said one.

"She's a good mixture of fun and responsibility wadded into a big ball of Kate," said another.

Her roommates say her goal is to be "the next Martha Stewart...only cooler!" They also say she is a good friend to turn to for advice and encouragement.

Finally, her friends last wish is for her to stay at PC one more year. "We just hope she doesn't get enough CEP's," they said.

Seniors give men's tennis edge over tough competition

by Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

The Blue Hose men's tennis team began its season on Saturday, February 6 at Furman University with a win over Erskine College and a loss to Furman University. In the match against Furman University, seniors Zach Loftis and Preston Manning won their match 8-2 against Furman's Gill-Parker doubles team. Loftis and Manning are playing in the number one doubles spot this season, and last season the combo was ranked number 3 in the regional rankings. Both Loftis and Manning received All-SAC honors last season and were ranked number 25 in the nation as a doubles team.

"We have a very tough schedule this season, but with our 5 returning seniors I feel very confident about our upcoming season," said Manning. "Hopefully we can repeat last year's season by winning the SAC Conference tournament again, win the NCAA Division II East Regional again, and advance to the NCAA National Tournament again. I think that with hard work and team unity we can definitely achieve these."

The second match that the team played at the Furman University Shootout, the Blue Hose were victorious again opponent Erskine College. The doubles teams swept the Erskine doubles, while PC came out 4-6 in the singles matches. Manning, with career record 61-32 in singles defeated his opponent 6-4, 6-3. Loftis won in three sets 6-2, 3-6, 6-3. His current career record stands at 65-35. Chuck Webb, senior, won 6-1, 6-2. Todd Toemmich also defeated his opponent 6-1, 6-0.

The Blue Hose men's tennis team began the spring season ranked regionally and nationally, number 3 and number 25, respectively. In addition to the five returning seniors, the team also has skilled underclassmen: junior Jeremy Carl, #1 singles player for the team, sophomore Donny Thoresen and freshmen Shane Whitley and Sam Small. Their next match is scheduled for Saturday, February 13 in Florence, South Carolina.

Women's basketball to host tourney game

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The women's basketball team has virtually wrapped up hosting a first-round South Atlantic Conference Tournament game on February 23 with an 19-5 record and an 9-3 conference record.

Toni Leopard scored a career high against Lenoir-Rhyne. She scored 25 points leading the Lady Blue Hose to an 85-79 victory. Rachel Sloan scored 18 points and led the team with eight rebounds. PC shot 49 percent from the field as they jumped out to a 13 point halftime advantage.

The Lady Blue Hose defeated a stingy Mars Hill team 79-71. Four of the five starters scored in double-figures, led by Leopard's 20 points and six rebounds. Sloan and Jill Neumann chipped in 16 and 15 points, respectively. Tracy Wood scored 14 points. The team shot 45 percent from the field and forced Mars Hill into turning the ball over 22 times.

PC lost a thriller in overtime to Carson-Newman, 82-77, on February 6. The Lady Blue Hose were led by Sloan's 19 points. Neumann chipped in 17 points and had

Returning players give golf team opportunity for successful season

Under the leadership of Tommy Addison, the PC golf team finished fourth, second, fifth, second and sixth in their 1998 fall tournaments two of which included two division one tournaments.

Even though the team is young, it is full of talent and experience.

Padgett has two years of experience and is playing well. In the fall Biber and Easley posted 73.6 and 75.0 stroke averages, respectively. Biber's 73.6 stroke average for the fall was a team best. Addison, Gardner and Sjoström provide experience and talent for the blue hose.

From Nov. 1 to Nov. 3 the Blue Hose played at the Davidson College Invitational in Davidson, N.C. The team's second place finish behind Wofford was very impressive considering they were the only division II team at the tournament.

The Blue Hose even had a good chance of winning the tournament.

"We had the lead going into the last hole," said Coach Addison.

From Nov. 15 to Nov. 17 the team competed in the Richard Rendleman Intercollegiate tournament at Salisbury, N.C. The team had a score of 607 and finished sixth in the tournament. Padgett led the way for the blue hose with a score of 147. Biber, Easley, Addison and Gardner had scores of 150, 151, 160, and 161, respectively. The team's stroke average was 75.8 for the tournament.

"This tournament was a wake up call for the players," said Addison.

"The team has been practicing very hard since the [Richard Rendleman Intercollegiate] tournament," said Addison.

four assists. Leopard gave the team a spark off the bench by scoring 16 points and leading the team in rebounds with 11. PC was up two at halftime, 29-27, but got outscored by five in the overtime. The Lady Blue Hose shot 50 percent from the three-point line while hitting eight three-pointers.

PC defeated Wingate University 80-67 at home on February 3. Woody led the team with 17 points. Heather Couch and Neumann scored 15 and 13 points respectively. The defense stopped Wingate and forced them to turn the ball over 19 times.

PC's last game is at Gardner-Webb tomorrow night. The SAC Tournament will be played next week.

Women's tennis team begins spring season defending SAC title

by Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

After an outstanding record last season, the women's tennis team looks for yet another great year with the spring season just around the corner. The season begins February 18 with an opener against Pfeiffer University at home. Donna Arnold, six time SAC Coach of the Year, will lead this team with experience of 12 years as the Presbyterian College women's tennis coach under her belt. She has an outstanding record as the tennis coach here at PC, 190-76. The two seniors this season are Kelli Kirkland, captain and All-SAC in 1997 and Robyn Loveless. Loveless took two years off from tennis after being voted SAC Freshman of the Year her freshman year. Other returning key players are 1998 All-SAC sophomore Sunny Armstrong and 1998 All-SAC and Freshman of the Year, sophomore Clayton McGee. McGee also plays in the number one doubles team with freshman Kelly Fitzpatrick. During the fall season, McGee and Fitzpatrick qualified for the National Rolex doubles tournament after winning the ITA regional tournament. The doubles team is ranked 4th in the East Region for the spring season.

"I am looking forward to this season. I think that we have a great chance of winning the Conference Tournament again. Our freshmen, Susie Coggins, Kelly Fitzpatrick and Louisa Hargett are really going to help us out," said McGee.

Last season, the team won the SAC Conference tournament for the 7th time in the past 8 years, were undefeated against SAC teams and returned to the NCAA Division II National Tournament. This season their goal is to repeat this performance again.

Byron Graham led the team with 31 points on 11 of 16 shooting from the floor including five three pointers. Eric Burrow grabbed eight rebounds and ten points. Jason Cocheroff came off the bench to provide a spark with 17 points and two rebounds. Mars Hill hit 11 three-pointers but turned the ball over 16 times.

On February 6, PC traveled to Jefferson City, Tennessee to face Carson-Newman and came away with a 59-53 loss. The Blue Hose came out and only scored 15 points in the first half, making only five baskets. Burrow led the team in scoring with 18 points, while Cocheroff chipped in 12 points. D.J. After defeating Newberry by 28 points, the Blue Hose lost to a 17-4 Wingate team 51-37. PC shot the ball 31 percent for the game. Cocheroff led the team with nine points and Humphries led the team with 12 rebounds. PC turned the ball over 18 times to Wingate's ten.

The men's last basketball game is tomorrow night at Garner-Webb and the SAC conference tournament will get under way next week.

CEP's should foster community, not dissention

So, want to know what PC's hot topic is today? It is not the meal plan anymore. It is not the use of scholarships to pay for off campus housing either. Today's hot topic is... (drum roll)... (more drums)... student attitudes toward our CEP's. That's right, nine out of ten professors can be described as "fired up" about some recent CEP situations. Funny how none of us seem to know about it, huh? I thought so. So let's see where CEP's fit into your campus life.

Let's start with PC's strong points. Some things at PC are obviously strong: great professors... friendly students... fine cuisine... Stephen Newton. You know, the usual. I propose, however, that PC's greatest strength is something else. (I know, you are saying: "Please, Luke, tell us what it is, we will give you anything." That's okay, I will tell you for free). Our greatest strength is that, regardless of our major or grades, we will all inevitably complete our college career as "Men and Women of Letters."

Let me elaborate...

Here at PC, located in Clinton, SC, we are affiliated with the PCUSA. We specialize in organizations. We participate in FCA, BSU, or WF; attend services at First P. and major in CE. Some students find themselves comfortable in other groups, like MSU and ROTC, or dedicate themselves to other majors, such as MFL, or SPED. Almost everyone is involved in something, be it SNS, AIBS, PCNP, SUB, SEA, FOB, SVS or SGA. Many students join groups that use the Greek alphabet. Imagine my computer would do Greek font, and then read these: ASPH, THC, PKA, PKPh, SN, KA, ADP, ZTA and tri-S. Other students don't have time because they have to work. They are our RAs. You can find them attending classes at HP or eating in GDH.

Of course, students will note that participation in these organizations is not required for graduation. All of these "letter-clubs" are bonuses. They are fun. Aside from general education and major requirements, the only thing that a PC student has to do to attain his BA or BS degree is fill his quota of CEP's. That's what makes CEP's special.

CEP's can be fun. Any student can tell you that our performance events are entertaining and always packed. But the lectures? Apparently not so captivating. Unless the speaker is Christopher Darden or Walter Payton, we don't usually show up. (In fact, I heard praise for our lectures from just one student, and he went to Furman.)

How can you tell that students are not enthusiastic about lectures? Just pick an audience. For example, among the most interesting CEP's presented last semester was a lecture by the President of Furman University, Dr. David Shi, delivered just before Dr. Griffith's inauguration. The lecture focused on the expansion and growth of Furman under his administration, and was intended as an example of how PC itself might fulfill its vision through strategic planning. Technical, eh? To complicate the matter, this CEP allowed audience participation. That meant that a PC student was asked to respond to Dr. Shi's speech and that the audience could ask questions.

Well, Dr. Shi's lecture may not have been the most enriching CEP in terms of culture, but it did address one topic that should have interested members of the PC community—namely, PC itself. And having student response and audience participation offered the PC community an easy opportunity to express itself and to ask questions. Some issues discussed were the need for updated and available technology (anyone want to rent a computer?) and future majors that PC might offer (computer science, philosophy or journalism, anybody?).

So, did students attend? Sure they did. Luckily, it was also Homecoming week. That meant that campus organizations were competing in various activities for cash prizes. One way of earning points toward a prize was for an organization to send one member to each CEP. That means that in addition to a number of faculty, there were maybe fifteen or twenty students in attendance. I was one of them, earning a point for WF.

Now here's the "funny" part. Despite the quality of Dr. Shi's speech (including good jokes), the energy of the student response and the opportunity to ask questions, seventy-five percent of the students who attended could tell you more of their dreams during that hour than they could about the CEP. It was bad. And it was just one example of something that happens all the time. We sleep during lectures, and if we feel that would be too obvious, we bring an easily concealed book. (It won't help me to say this, but I myself have received CEP credit for more than one "nap" and a couple of last minute study sessions, too).

Clearly, our lack of enthusiasm indicates a problem in attitude. Can we not get more excited? Why is it that, if we are bored or frustrated by five lectures a semester, we do nothing about it? So far, our behavior has sent a clear message. Every time a student falls asleep during a CEP he indicates that the lecture or performance is worthless. And every time that one of us endures a "boring" CEP and does nothing about it, she shows how little she values her time. Just last month, we showed the same attitude at a performance event, talking through the program and, through our lack of appreciation, leaving an internationally known musician very upset. If we were not rude ourselves, then we as a body have let it happen.

At a school like PC, where over 60% of students are actively involved in SVS alone, this apathy is absurd. We are saying that there is nothing we can do. The administration will keep providing the same programs, we will sit through them and we will complain: "Lectures are boring. It will always be that way. Boring speeches forever."

If there is a point to my article, it is this: The main strength at Presbyterian College has always been student participation and leadership in organizations. We are SGA, FCA, IFC, BSU, MSU and a host of other organizations, Greek and non-Greek. The Cultural Enrichment Program is subject to some portion of the student interest that we give to SVS or SGA. If we are not pleased with the CEP we can suggest changes and the administration will work with us. There is no voice on campus larger than ours. All we have to do is say something.

For CEP's, we can do two things.

First, we can all pay a little more attention to how we attend CEP's. We get the topics in August, and we know our requirements right from the beginning. Our options are wide open. We can decide in September which events sound interesting, and how to balance lectures and performances. It isn't hard, and we shouldn't be pressed at the end of the year to cram CEP's we don't like.

Second (and most important), we can change the CEP. No joke. If that sounds crazy, it shouldn't. Administration wants to keep students interested. So what would make the CEP more interesting for you? A change in topic? How about issues related directly to college life. A change in speakers? How about hearing from someone who knows who you are, maybe your favorite professor, or even your classmates. What about format? Are you tired of lectures? Would debates be more exciting? If you would like to hear a debate on the ethics of genetic engineering, get up right now and tell somebody. In fact, tell the person sitting next to you. She may like the idea

Faculty, students consider sleep-over success

by Doodle Harris
Campus Life Editor

On the evening of Thursday, February 11, some peculiar faces were lurking around the dorms on campus. Although these strangers were not unfamiliar, they seemed a little out of place. Sightings were also reported throughout the night at Waffle House, Karaoke bars and Fraternity court. The Donimo's pizza delivery boy also claimed repeated contact with the mysterious guests.

On February 11, PC's Resident Hall Association hosted the first ever faculty and staff sleep-over in which each hall picked a favorite professor, administrator or staff member to spend the night on their hall. PC professionals and students were asked to step outside their comfort zone and extend their relationships beyond the classroom.

The idea was first suggested at RA training previous to the start of school and finally blossomed at the inauguration of Dr. John V. Griffith earlier this school year.

"Each organization was asked to present a gift that symbolizes their organization," said RHA president Catherine Breitenhirt. "We chose a night in the dorm. Then, this semester, we decided to make it a faculty sleepover to encourage more interaction between students and faculty."

According to evaluations completed by the students and faculty that participated, most agreed that the event was a worthwhile experience. Faculty enjoyed reliving a bit of their youth and students were excited to show faculty their favorite hang-out spots. The evaluations also revealed that most of the students and faculty alike felt awkward at some point during the evening. However, 75% of the students and all but one faculty member agreed that they would do it again.

Nikki Richardson, RA of first floor Grotnes, called the event a "wonderful success." Although she could participate little, due to tests the next day, she testified to the enthusiasm of the girls on her hall.

"My girls were so excited," she said. "They took her to Waffle House and to the Ramada Inn to sing Karaoke."

Ann Adams, secretary of Neville and guest of Laurens dorm, agreed.

"It was fun to watch and to actively participate in some of the same activities that the students participate in on a Thursday night - except the studying," she said.

Laurens Dorm caused quite a commotion early Thursday evening with a water gun fight. Participants included Carrie Bowers, Amy Cooper, Katie Dobbins, Margaret Fuller and Anna Gasque.

"It started in the front of our dorm after the our grill out," said Gasque. "Then we moved over to Smyth and soaked Dana, our RD. Then we proceeded to soak everyone we saw in Smyth. Then we moved over to Georgia and found out that Dr. Griffith was staying with Trip Taylor. We knocked on the door and when he opened it, we soaked him. We threatened to soak Dr. Gillespie and Dr. Ellis, but they didn't seem too happy, and we were out of ammo. It was funny."

Hosting Dr. Griffith was a learning experience and a treat for Taylor.

"They're not as 'close-minded' as I thought," he said.

While Laurens girls caused chaos around the campus, sorority Alpha Delta Pi spent more serious time with the professors.

"We kidnapped three of them and brought them to our Bible study," said Lee Davis, junior. "They were surprised at what we believed, and we tried to dispel their misconceptions about PC students. It was intense."

Many of the faculty ended the night with a trip to fraternity court. Pi Kappa Phi hosted a special celebration where the faculty were invited to dance and party.

Stephanie Winslet, guest of first floor Grotnes, said that her favorite part was "seeing professors bust-a-move at fraternity court."

Other students also had positive thoughts about the sleep-over.

Women win SAC tourney, receive NCAA berth

by Jeff Walker

The Lady Blue Hose basketball team swept the SAC Conference Tournament for the second year in a row, gaining a berth in the NCAA Division II South Atlantic Regional Tournament. Coach Beth Couture has led PC to its second straight NCAA Tournament appearance and its fourth in the last six seasons. The Lady Blue Hose will play Wingate in the first round of the NCAA Division II Tournament. PC split the series with Wingate this year.

"The team has come together and everybody is contributing to the team," said Couture.

In the SAC Championship game, the Lady Blue Hose won 69-66 and were led by Tracy Woody, who was named the SAC Tournament MVP honors and went six of 14 from the floor to score 18 points. Tom Leopard and Jill Neumann each scored 12 points. Rachel Sloan added ten points for the Lady Blue Hose. PC was down 39-33 at halftime. In the second half, PC shot 60 percent from the three point line to make the comeback.

In the semifinals, PC battled the third-seeded Lady Indians of Catawba. PC came out blistering in the first half by shooting 47 percent from the field and taking a 42-28 half-time lead. After shooting 47 percent from the field in the first half, PC heated up again and shot 64 percent from the field in the second half to win the game

88-71. All five starters scored in double-figures: Heather Couch 21, Woody 16, Leopard 15, Sloan 13 and Neumann 12. Merritt Misner came off the bench to play 16 minutes and to score nine points.

The Lady Blue Hose hosted the first round game of the SAC Conference Tournament. With a packed house, PC did not disappoint by winning 98-49 over Lenox Rhyme. The team was led by Leopard's 26 points as she went 11-of-18 from the field. Sloan chipped in 19 points and pulled down five rebounds. Woody added 13 points while Darah Huffman came off the bench to score 10 points. The Lady Blue Hose shot 51 percent from the field and the defense was stingy as they created 26 turnovers.

Rachel Sloan was named the SAC Player of the Year. She is the first sophomore ever to be named the SAC Player of the Year. She was also named to the SAC First Team. Leopard was named to the All-Tournament Team and the Freshman SAC Team. Woody was named to the Second-Team All-SAC as well as the All-Tournament team.

The Lady Blue Hose have achieved their goals for the season with a regular season SAC Championship, the SAC Tournament, and a berth to the NCAA Division II Tournament. The Lady Blue Hose will play number one seeded and host Francis Marion (26-2), today if at 8:00 they defeat Wingate. PC ended with a 24-5 overall regular season record and many memories of the 98-99 basketball season.

In the SAC Championship game the Lady Blue Hose won 69-66 and were led by Tracy Woody, who was named the SAC Tournament MVP honors and went six of 14 from the floor to score 18 points. Tom Leopard and Jill Neumann each scored 12 points. Rachel Sloan added ten points for the Lady Blue Hose. PC was down 39-33 at halftime. In the second half, PC shot 60 percent from the three point line to make the comeback.

In the semifinals, PC battled the third-seeded Lady Indians of Catawba. PC came out blistering in the first half by shooting 47 percent from the field and taking a 42-28 halftime lead. After shooting 40 percent from the field in the first half, PC heated up again and shot 64 percent from the field in the second half to win the game.

88-71. All five starters scored in double-figures: Heather Couch 21, Woody 16, Leopard 15, Sloan 13 and Neumann 12. Merritt Misner came off the bench to play 16 minutes and to score nine points.

The Lady Blue Hose hosted the first round game of the SAC Conference Tournament. With a packed house, PC did not disappoint by winning 98-49 over Lenoir-Rhyne. The team was led by Leopard's 26 points as she went 11 of 18 from the field. Sloan chipped in 19 points and pulled down five rebounds. Woody added 13 points while Darah Huffman came off the bench to score 10 points. The Lady Blue Hose shot 51 percent from the field and the defense was stingy as they created 26 turnovers.

Rachel Sloan was named the SAC Player of the Year. She is the first sophomore ever to be named the SAC Player of the Year. She was also named to the SAC First Team. Leopard was named to the All Tournament Team and the Freshman SAC Team. Woody was named to the Second Team All-SAC as well as the All Tournament team.

The Lady Blue Hose have achieved their goals for the season with a regular season SAC Championship, the SAC Tournament, and a berth to the NCAA Division II tournament. The Lady Blue Hose will play number one seeded and host Francis Marion (26-2), today if at 8:00 they defeat Wingate. PC ended with a 24-5 overall regular season record and many memories of the 98-99 basketball season.

POINT

Faculty sleepover should become annual event

We would like to commend the Residence Hall Association and all others involved in organizing the faculty sleep-over on February 11. It was a grand success in promoting better faculty-student relations, a tenet of Presbyterian College values and a major goal of the strategic plan.

The concept was an interesting idea. At first, many were unsure how well it would go over with students as well as faculty. However, we were pleasantly surprised that everyone seemed comfortable with their arrangements, whether it was eating at Gooneybird's or hanging out at the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity house. We especially enjoyed socializing with our favorite professors and officers of the college.

One regret was that some professors and other staff members were left out of the event. We know that some of them also were disappointed that they were not chosen. We realize that in its initial year, the sleep-over would not be perfect. It takes several times to work out all the bugs.

We suggest that the sleep-over become an annual event. It is a very memorable experience for all involved, and it certainly fosters a more open and accepting community, an atmosphere for which this college strives. For freshmen to get to know their professors is very important in their initial year here, and for upperclassmen to continue to meet and be involved with former and current professors is crucial to ensuring a rewarding four-year experience. Therefore, personal interaction during non-academic time is essential to maintain relationships and the intimate environment on which Presbyterian College prides itself.

"It places a better relationship between students and faculty," said Zach Braden.

Rodney Sullivan, senior, agreed that fostering better student-faculty relations was achieved.

"I think this event was very helpful," said Sullivan. "Students know now that faculty persons are people too."

Participating professors also had optimistic outlooks after spending out of class time with students.

"[The event] confirmed a generally positive view of our students and also emphasized a need for more faculty/student interaction outside class," said Dr. Richard Baker, professor of philosophy, visitor to third floor Bailey.

Some complaints did arise throughout the evening. Students had little time to study for tests to be taken the next day.

"I didn't get a chance to study because I wanted to make sure Dr. His had a good time," said Sarah Jones, RA of first floor Smyth.

Although Dr. Griffith finally hit the sack at 3:30 a.m., woke up at 6:30 and attended a 7:30 meeting Friday morning, many faculty didn't get to bed as early as they wanted.

"But that's the idea," said Hank Coleman, freshman. "We don't get to bed because we're up doing the homework they assigned."

Also, some students were a little disappointed not to get their favorite faculty member and some faculty were a little disappointed not to be invited.

An effort should be made to include all faculty and administrative staff," said Adams.

Mike Rosolimo, director of test/dance life, was pleased with the event.

"Its purpose was to foster faculty/student interaction," he said. "It was a very positive experience. Everyone seemed to have a good time. We will definitely consider doing it again next year or a couple of years down the road."

We want your opinion!

Zubrod resigns

Vice president's legacy to remain on campus

by Hank Coleman
Staff Writer

Most PC students know and recognize Dr. Griffith and Dean Nixon, but very few of the student body know the man behind the scenes, Skip Zubrod.

Zubrod is the Vice President for Finance of Presbyterian College, and he will be leaving to take another job at the end of this school year. Zubrod's job as vice president has many tasks, such as administrator of the annual budget and overseer of the day-to-day administrative operations, personnel, purchasing, physical plant, food service, legal matters, summer conferences, public safety and PC's $70 million endowment.

The students may not personally know the vice president of 15 years, but his impact on PC is felt all around campus, from the Department of Student Affairs, Academics, Athletic Department and the Administration.

"Mr. Zubrod has always been a very strong supporter of PC athletics," said Allen Morris, athletic director. "He makes every effort to be out at most of the ball games."

Ever since Zubrod, a Pennsylvania native, arrived on campus in 1984, his impact and support have been felt greatly. He has had an important role in the construction of Harrington-Peachtree Center, Edmunds Hall, Barron Hall, Grotnes Hall, the Intramural Complex and the townhouses. Zubrod worked closely with the designers, was in charge of supervising the projects, oversaw the furnishings of the buildings and also negotiated with the individual contractors in the construction of these facilities.

"I think that at every turn you see the impact of his careful and firm stewardship of the institution," said John V. Griffith, president. "Mr. Zubrod has a very special gift of finance and administrative management. He often jokes about being the man that says 'No!' all the time [about money], but he says no and accomplishes a lot at the same time."

Joe Nixon, dean of students, said Zubrod's departure will be a loss to PC.

"Mr. Skip Zubrod possesses such a broad scope of skills and knowledge in areas such as finance, construction and personnel that he will be a very difficult person to replace," said Nixon. "He has been very supportive and has become a good friend. He will be greatly missed at PC."

He will indeed be missed here at PC by the students, faculty, and community, but Zubrod's vision for a greater PC will live on in the buildings, endowment and other accomplishments that he has left behind.

Griffith met with the Board of Trustees at the end of this week to discuss searching for a new vice president, but no decision has been made as of yet. However, it is Griffith's goal to find a suitable replacement to start on the first of July.

SUB: Organization increases campus activities, provides alternative entertainment for students

by Tara Sluder
Staff Writer

The opening of the PC Cinema, the recent visit from the hypnotist and the poster sales in Springs were ideas created and carried out by the Student Union Board (SUB). SUB consists of a group of about thirty students as well as a few faculty and staff advisors who provide the campus with many different entertainment activities.

"SUB is here to support students and offer leisure time activities," said Shanna McAlister, President of SUB. "We basically do anything that constitutes fun."

SUB has been around for many years, but it fell apart over the last few years. This year, however, SUB emerged back onto the scene and currently has many plans for the spring semester.

"From what I've seen this year, SUB has taken strides in expanding the range of activities provided for the students," said Dr. Eric Johnson, faculty advisor to SUB. "The growth has actually been a greater tolerance in the organization for taking risks and a greater willingness to invigorate weekend activities on campus."

SUB consists of committees who organize games, concerts, movies, trips and other activities. They meet every other Wednesday to discuss students' ideas and input and to incorporate them into events on campus. SUB sponsored such events as the trip to the Baltimore House and the Hot Shots photographer.

On February 18 students and faculty shagged at Shagfest '99 in Springs, an event sponsored by SUB.

"The Shagfest was really cool, and a lot of people had a lot of fun," said Nicky Stogner, freshman. "They should definitely do it again next year."

Future plans by SUB include inflatable games on the east plaza, the showing of Jaws in the pool area and mud volleyball. SUB will also co-sponsor events with FCA and ROTC, such as Bebo Norman in concert and paintball.

"One of the goals of SUB is to bring the student body together," said Dana Becker, staff advisor to SUB. "We want to involve the diverse groups of campus who aren't involved elsewhere and provide entertainment activities that students are interested in."

Members of SUB express gratitude for the efforts and aid of the faculty and staff advisors who support SUB.

"Dr. Johnson has been an integral part in getting us organized and back on line," said McAlister.

SUB is open to anyone on campus who would like to participate. They want student input and desire more involvement from students. Anyone interested should go by the student activities office in Springs.

"I would like to see SUB come to a level where students run it completely on their own," said Becker. "SUB provides an awesome experience and the opportunity to develop leadership skills that can be applied later in life."

Johnson agrees that SUB's objective is to provide students what they want.

"SUB is aware of the number of students who would like the college to provide more weekend activities than what's offered on the fraternity court," said Johnson. "We want the students who go home every weekend for lack of entertainment on campus to contact SUB and let us know how we can help them and what kind of events they would like to see offered on the weekends."

PC hosts memorial in honor of college leader, benefactor

by Kay Owen
Editor-in-Chief

Thursday, March 18 at 6:15p.m. in Edmunds Hall, PC hosted a memorial service to honor the late Rev. Dr. William Franklin Harrington, a PC alumnus (class of 1957) and Chairman of the Board of Trustees (1982-1999). Harrington also served as senior minister of Peachtree Presbyterian Church in Atlanta from 1972-1999.

The service was an adaptation of the March 6 funeral service held at Harrington's home church. The selected hymns and Bible verses were chosen by Harrington's family from notes he had left behind. The service was led by Dr. Greg Henley, chaplain. Students took the responsibility of reading the chosen verses. In addition, the PC Choir led the singing of hymns and performed anthems of their own under the direction of Dr. Porter Stokes.

Dr. John V. Griffith, president of the college; Zeta Lamberson, sophomore; Dr. George Ramsey, professor of Religion and the chairman of the Senior Faculty Council; and Dr. Fred Davison, the interim chairman of the Board of Trustees all gave their remembrances of Harrington.

Griffith commented primarily upon Harrington's career as a PC student. While at PC, Harrington participated in the PC Choir, played the tuba in the ROTC band, served as vice-president of his sophomore class, was a member of the Ministerial Club, made the Dean's List from his sophomore to senior years and worked in food service under the direction of Mr. Vernon Powell.

Griffith explained how Harrington always felt an indebtedness and sense of gratitude to PC for taking him under its wing and teaching him the values of hard work and discipline.

In his first meeting with Harrington, which took place when Griffith was a candidate for presidency of the college, Griffith recalled asking Harrington what was special about PC.

"He looked at me a minute," said Griffith, "and then he said, 'PC has changed my life, and if you're lucky, it just might change your life, too.'"

Lamberson's recollections were from her relationship with Harrington as a member of his church. She remembered her minister as "humble, compassionate, diligent, selfless and a man of unconditional love. He lived and died as he wanted to."

Lamberson also commented on how Harrington urged her to come to PC and on how his work lives on at the school.

Harrington-Peachtree is so Dr. Harrington," she said. "You know, sort of loud, but not."

Ramsey remembered Harrington as a man who wanted to serve God. Ramsey explained that for Harrington, the best way to serve God was by "keeping it simple" and not going over people's heads when communicating the Gospel.

Davison concluded these remembrances of Harrington by saying Harrington was a "Modern-Day Apostle Paul."

"[Dr. Harrington] was driven by a deep commitment to Christ and to the Church," Davison said. "He was a missionary and his true memorial will be his continuing presence at PC."

POINT

Memorial service should not constitute CEP credit

It was very commendable for the campus to host a memorial service in honor of Dr. Frank Harrington. However, we at The Blue Stocking are appalled at the idea that students received CEP credit for their attendance at the event. Such an occasion is a time to honor a man that had an incredible and memorable impact on this institution. Students should have attended the service out of appreciation and gratitude for his outstanding efforts to promote and advance the PC community and out of respect for a man who led such a respectable life. It is discouraging to know that enough administrators felt incentive, in the form of a CEP lecture credit, was necessary to draw students. What provides some relief is that less than 20 CEP cards were turned in at the culmination of the event.

Granted, those students in attendance (maybe 75) were well-behaved and respectful in the manner the situation warranted. But it is further appalling that Edmunds Hall was not half full during the service. It certainly seems that people on this campus, both faculty and students, could be more appreciative of a man who has contributed endless time and dedication to every individual here.

Letters

Dear Editor:

Last Tuesday, while visiting at Presbyterian College, I happened to pick up a copy of The Blue Stocking. Reading with interest the article "My Turn" by Luke Ellis, I must admit that I began to question my judgment in agreeing to give a lecture in conjunction with the 13th Annual Arnold Symposium. I had spent many hours contemplating the topic and the appropriate message, and now, I feared that despite my efforts, the reception would be less than welcoming.

My concerns could not have been more misplaced. First, I was amazed at the number of students who attended the lecture — the crowd only made me more determined to somehow reach the students with my message. From the beginning questions that I posed to the PC students to the closing challenges I left for them, I could not have asked for a more respectful, attentive audience. It really seemed that those in attendance took an interest in the topic, and after some initial comments, I not only was embraced but that I had indeed found the student response I was most grateful that I had accepted the invitation and experienced a day with the students at PC.

As an added note, my entire visit to your campus was a very positive experience. The students who escorted me, the potential new students with whom I talked, and the members of the faculty and administration who I met all demonstrated boundless enthusiasm for PC and its programs. I am sure you are aware of it, but it never hurts to hear it from an outsider. You really have a lot to be proud of at PC. Thanks for making my short visit there most enjoyable.

Sincerely,
Penny J. White

more and junior years. Newton is also very proud to be a member of Project Understanding.

"Project Understanding is a great addition to the PC campus," he said. "It is basically trying to increase campus diversity. We [Project Understanding] want to help to raise the level of awareness on campus. I want to be a part of the healing process on campus. I really enjoy being a part of breaking down communication barriers."

Newton is a business major because he sees the business world as a good career opportunity.

"I am very interested in the money available to be earned in the business world," he said. "I also need my freedom. The business world seems to have the freedom from the nine to five that I need to maintain my happiness. I plan on becoming an entrepreneur. After that I plan to start giving back to the community. By the time I hit 40, I plan to become a philanthropist."

Newton will remember his friends as the most important part of his time at PC.

"I am coming close to the close of my PC career," he said. "I think one of the main reasons I like PC so much is because of the people I have come in contact with, the friends I have made and the experiences we have shared."

Senior Spotlight: Newton takes lead on campus

by Kathryn Mehl
Staff Writer

Stephan Newton is a 6'2", fifth year senior from Columbia, South Carolina. Unlike many of his football cohorts, he did not identify with the Greek life.

Newton came upon PC just by coincidence. While attending high school, one of Stephan's friends was being scouted by the PC football team. The scout asked Newton to come back to PC and take a tour with his friend. Stephan agreed and found he really liked PC.

"I was extremely impressed with PC when I visited," he said. "I liked the low teacher-to-student ratio. I also liked it because it was practical. I say that because it is reasonably close to home, and I still got to play football. I really liked it because it was incredibly challenging. I wanted to break the dumb athlete stereotype. I had West Point scouting me also. After I decided to attend PC, the West Point scout called me and interrogated me on my choice."

Stephan has had a very busy PC experience. He had a lot of experience at sports in high school and chose to continue at PC. He is a four year letterman. Three of his four years as one of the Blue Hose football players he was a strong safety, and his senior year was spent as a linebacker. He also received the Unsung Hero Award. It is an award designed to give credit to a player who made a lot of impact on the team but did not receive very much recognition for their efforts.

Though his senior year was wrought with injury, he was still invited to many professional football camps.

There is a good possibility that I will get invited back to the same camps this year," said Newton. "I didn't get to go last year because of my knee and ankle, but I would go this year if I got invited back. If I had a choice, I would play for the Atlanta Falcons or the Carolina Panthers. Those would be the logical choices, but if it were my dream team I would play for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers."

Newton enjoys playing football because of the camaraderie involved.

"I love football," he said. "It is a great stress reliever. It is the only game that I know of where you can beat on a stranger, and come out after the game shaking hands. Some of the best friends of your life you will make on the football field."

Newton did not spend all of his time at PC on the football field. He has been an officer of Multicultural Student Union all five of his years at PC and is currently a Sergeant at Arms. He was also a member of the Chess Club his sophomore year.

Students survive severe weather for sake of outdoors adventure

by Kathryn Mehl
Staff Writer

Spelunking, rock climbing, rafting, and backpacking...if this sounds like fun, the club for you is American Institute of Biological Sciences, otherwise known as AIBS.

AIBS is a biology related club that regularly participates in outdoor activities. The club has around twelve active members. Active members are defined as anyone who has paid their dues and gone on one of the trips. The dues are five dollars and are used for transportation costs to and from trip locations. AIBS is not able to pay for the equipment and supplies needed for each student, so the students are required to take the burden on themselves. However, Student Activities bought the club two tents, which have made the trips less expensive.

AIBS has been on several trips within the past year. They have been backpacking on Cold Mountain where they were forced to leave early by a wildfire. Two weeks ago, they went to North Georgia to brave Section 13 of the Appalachian Trail. (For those who don't know, the Appalachian Trail is a long, very strenuous trail that extends through several states.) During this trip they were also attacked by severe weather. Thunderstorms, pressing rain, and freezing temperatures plagued them until the last day of the trail.

Last semester, AIBS went on a spelunking trip near Knoxville, TN in the Cumberland Mountains. They started to hike towards the cave, which was supposed to be four miles down the trail. Luckily, a few hunters found them, and began to tell them the cave was eight miles away from their current location. The hunters were nice enough to take them back to the cave on their four-wheelers. AIBS made it to the cave and went caving for four hours. They saw an underground waterfall and met another adventuresome group from Vanderbilt.

They also went climbing last year north of Charlotte and this year in a rock wall in Greenville.

The tentatively planned trip for this semester is a choice between rafting and spelunking.

In addition to their many trips, AIBS has adopted a three mile stretch of Highway 76. The club members go out three-five times a year to pick up the garbage left by passers by.

If you are interested in AIBS, you can go to the group's meetings on Wednesdays at 6:30 p.m. in Richardson 207B or contact McKissick.

Dean of Students announces verdict for conduct violations

A student was charged with violations of the Code of Conduct. Joe Nixon, dean of students, investigated the charges and determined the following penalties:

1. Drunkenness - 12 hours of work with the maintenance department to be completed by 23 April.
2. Under-age possession and consumption of alcohol - 12 hours of work with the maintenance department, same completion date.
3. Vandalism - pay for any damage.
4. Disorderly conduct - banned from the fraternity court until 19 April 1999 and prohibited from pledging or becoming a social affiliate of any Greek organization until 19 April 1999.

Board appoints transition leadership

The Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees selected an interim chairman and put together a search committee for someone to fill the office permanently. They appointed Dr. Fred Davison, current Vice Chairman, as Acting Chairman until a new Chairman is selected. Davison chaired PC's presidential search committee and the strategic planning task force. He has been a member of the board of Trustees for 15 years and also chairs the Academic Affairs Committee. He is a former president of University of Georgia and the current president and CEO of National Science Center Foundation, Inc. The Executive Committee also authorized the Nominations Committee to communicate with the College family for the purpose of requesting and receiving nominations for Chairman. Mr. Ron Allen will chair that committee. Finally, the Executive Committee requested that the Nominations Committee prepare a slate of officers to be presented to and voted on by the full Board of Trustees at the 9-10 November 1999 meeting.

POINT

Memorial service should not constitute CEP credit

It was very commendable for the campus to host a memorial service in honor of Dr. Frank Harrington. However, we at The Blue Stocking are appalled at the idea that students received CEP credit for their attendance at the event. Such an occasion is a time to honor a man that had an incredible and memorable impact on this institution. Students should have attended the service out of appreciation and gratitude for his outstanding efforts to promote and advance the PC community and out of respect for a man who led such a respectable life. It is discouraging to know that enough administrators felt incentive, in the form of a CEP lecture credit, was necessary to draw students. What provides some relief is that less than 20 CEP cards were turned in at the culmination of the event.

Granted, those students in attendance (maybe 75) were well-behaved and respectful in the manner the situation warranted. But it is further appalling that Edmunds Hall was not half full during the service. It certainly seems that people on this campus, both faculty and students, could be more appreciative of a man who has contributed endless time and dedication to every individual here.

Razor (R)aid '99

The Chaplain's office and Westminster Fellowship is collecting razors to be donated to the Open Door in Atlanta. You can help by depositing new razors into boxes in Springs and each dorm lobby from now until April 12th. Donations may also be submitted through campus mail to Box 1075.

Dear Editor:

Last Tuesday, while visiting at Presbyterian College, I happened to pick up a copy of The Blue Stocking. Reading with interest the article "My Turn" by Luke Ellis, I must admit that I began to question my judgment in agreeing to give a lecture in conjunction with the 13th Annual Arnold Symposium. I had spent many hours contemplating the topic and the appropriate message, and now, I feared that despite my efforts, the reception would be less than welcoming.

My concerns could not have been more misplaced! First, I was amazed at the number of students who attended the lecture—the crowd only made me more determined to somehow reach the students with my message. From the beginning questions that I posed to the PC students to the closing challenges I left for them, I could not have asked for a more respectful, attentive audience. It really seemed that those in attendance took an interest in the topic, and after concluding my comments, I not only was embarrassed that I had treated the student response, I was most grateful that I had accepted the invitation and experienced a day with the students at PC.

As an added note, my entire visit to your campus was a very positive experience. The students who escorted me, the political science students with whom I talked, and the members of the faculty and administration who I met all demonstrated boundless enthusiasm for PC and its programs. I am sure you are aware of it, but it never hurts to hear it from an outsider. You really have a lot to be proud of at PC. Thanks for making my short visit there most enjoyable.

more and junior years. Newton is also very proud to be a member of Project Understanding.

"Project Understanding is a great addition to the PC campus," he said. "It is basically trying to increase campus diversity. We [Project Understanding] want to help to raise the level of awareness on campus. I want to be a part of the healing process on campus. I really enjoy being a part of breaking down communication barriers."

Newton is a business major because he sees the business world as a good career opportunity.

"I am very interested in the money available to be earned in the business world," he said. "I also need my freedom. The business world seems to have the freedom from the nine to five that I need to maintain my happiness. I plan on becoming an entrepreneur. After that I plan to start giving back to the community. By the time I hit 40, I plan to become a philanthropist."

Newton will remember his friends as the most important part of his time at PC.

"I am coming close to the close of my PC career," he said. "I think one of the main reasons I like PC so much is because of the people I have come in contact with, the friends I have made and the experiences we have shared."

Senior Spotlight: Newton takes lead on campus

by Kathryn Mehl
Staff Writer

Stephaun Newton is a 6'2", fifth year senior from Columbia, South Carolina. Unlike many of his football cohorts, he did not identify with the Greek life.

Newton came upon PC just by coincidence. While attending high school, one of Stephaun's friends was being scouted by the PC football team. The scout asked Newton to come back to PC and take a tour with his friend. Stephaun agreed and found he really liked PC.

"I was extremely impressed with PC when I visited," he said. "I liked the low teacher-to-student ratio. I also liked it because it was practical. I say that because it is reasonably close to home, and I still got to play football. I really liked it because it was incredibly challenging. I wanted to break the dumb athlete stereotype. I had West Point scouting me also. After I decided to attend PC, the West Point scout called me and interrogated me on my choice."

Stephaun has had a very busy PC experience. He had a lot of experience at sports in high school and chose to continue at PC. He is a four year letterman. Three of his four years as one of the Blue Hose football players he was a strong safety, and his senior year was spent as a linebacker. He also

Organization provides students opportunity to serve community

by Joe Evans
Staff Writer

The student body of Presbyterian College prides itself on its participation in many reckless and haphazard activities such as visiting fraternities and attending classes only in build. However, PC students are often not recognized for participating in activities that not only benefit the campus but also the community surrounding the college. Student Volunteer Services is an organization founded upon the basis of helping students express their charitable sides.

"SVS is a Christian service organization," said Beth Johnson, senior intern. "Our mission is to serve the campus as well as the community."

With two hundred to three hundred active volunteers and 38 different activities, ranging from elderly and social services to Special Olympics, students volunteer their time to serve a community that offers them a home away from home.

"You don't really think of it as work because it's so rewarding," said Johnson. "It's more like fun."

With the return of Johnson, SVS is excited about the new season of volunteer services and has many new and exciting programs lined up for the future. Like a rope of four infused threads, students, faculty, staff and administrators joined forces for the first annual Day of Caring. This day of fun, festivities and volunteering took place on PC campus and in the Clinton/Laurens community last Saturday. Another new program is being held to thank all volunteers. A SVS banquet which will be held this semester will feature a speaker and the awarding of the coveted Griffith Award to reward the achievements of one excellent SVS coordinator.

"This is a way to recognize old and new coordinators as well as volunteers," said Johnson.

Another major project scheduled for the new season of service is the Special Olympics. This competition will be held April 16 and is expected to be the biggest project to be held this spring. The Special Olympics is not only being organized by SVS but it will also be held in Presbyterian College's own Bailey Memorial Stadium.

Like a thuggish street gang dedicated to the common good and upholding justice, SVS serves her community always mindful of the motto of "While We Live, We Serve."

received the Unsung Hero Award. It is an award designed to give credit to a player who made a lot of impact on the team but did not receive very much recognition for their efforts.

Though his senior year was wrought with injury, he was still invited to many professional football camps.

There is a good possibility that I will get invited back to the same camps this year," said Newton. "I didn't get to go last year because of my knee and ankle, but I would go this year if I got invited back. If I had a choice, I would play for the Atlanta Falcons or the Carolina Panthers. Those would be the logical choices, but if it were my dream team I would play for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers."

Newton enjoys playing football because of the camaraderie involved.

"I love football," he said. "It is a great stress reliever. It is the only game that I know of where you can beat on a stranger, and come out after the game shaking hands. Some of the best friends of your life you will make on the football field."

Newton did not spend all of his time at PC on the football field. He has been an officer of Multicultural Student Union all five of his years at PC and is currently a Sergeant at Arms. He was also a member of the Chess Club his sophomore year.

Students survive severe weather for sake of outdoors adventure

by Kathryn Mehl
Staff Writer

Spelunking, rock climbing, rafting, and backpacking... If this sounds like fun, the club for you is American Institute of Biological Sciences, otherwise known as AIBS.

AIBS is a biology related club that regularly participates in outdoor activities. The club has around twelve active members. Active members are defined as anyone who has paid their dues and gone on one of the trips. The dues are five dollars and are used for transportation costs to and from trip locations. AIBS is not able to pay for the equipment and supplies needed for each student, so the students are required to take the burden on themselves. However, Student Activities bought the club two tents, which have made the trips less expensive.

AIBS has been on several trips within the past year. They have been backpacking on Cold Mountain where they were forced to leave early by a wildfire. Two weeks ago, they went to North Georgia to brave Section 13 of the Appalachian Trail. (For those who don't know, the Appalachian Trail is a long, very strenuous trail that extends through several states.) During this trip they were also attacked by severe weather. Thunderstorms, pressing rain, and freezing temperatures plagued them until the last day of the trail.

Last semester, AIBS went on a spelunking trip near Knoxville, TN in the Cumberland Mountains. They started to hike towards the cave, which was supposed to be four miles down the trail. Luckily, a few hunters found them, and began to tell them the cave was eight miles away from their current location. The hunters were nice enough to take them back to the cave on their four-wheelers. Lady Blue Hose lose in first round of NCAA's

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The Lady Blue Hose basketball team lost in the first round of the NCAA Division II Basketball Tournament to SAC foe and twenty-fifth ranked Wingate, 77-76. Wingate advanced to face number one seed and sixth-ranked Francis-Marion. PC set a record this year with 24 wins.

"This team was young this year but fun to coach," said head coach Beth Couture.

This year's team won the SAC regular season and the SAC Conference Tournament. The Lady-Blue Hose also accomplished this feat last year.

Rachel Sloan led the Lady Blue Hose in scoring with 25 points on seven-of-13 shooting. Toni Leopard scored 23 points on 10-of-15 shooting while grabbing two rebounds. Jill Neumann scored ten points and dished out three assists. Tracy Woody scored 12 points and grabbed five total rebounds. PC shot 25 of 57 for the game and five of 13 behind the three-point line. The Lady Blue Hose defense caused Wingate to turn the ball over 19 times.

The Lady Blue Hose jumped out to an early 11-8 lead with a Sloan layup four minutes into the game. Neumann stole the ball and hit a quick three-point shot to put the Blue Hose up 14-8. Wingate battled back and cut the lead to 16-15 before PC went on a 9-2 run to make the score 25-17. On this run, Leopard scored on a layup and hit two free throws. Couch hit a layup and Sloan got a tip in. Wingate and PC battled back and forth and exchanged baskets before PC took a 33-27 halftime lead. Leopard scored on a layup and hit one free-throw in the series right before halftime.

In the second half, PC came out strong as Neumann hit a three-pointer 15 seconds into the half. The Lady-Blue Hose increased their lead to 38-27 on a Woody seven-foot jumper. PC pushed the lead to 12 points on a Sloan tip in with 16 minutes left in the second half. At the 12 minute mark, Wingate closed the lead to six points with a few layups and free-throws until Woody hit a 13 foot-jumpshot to give PC a 52-44 lead. The lead got back up to 12 points as Jennifer Condon made two free-throws with 4:28 left in the game. The score was 71-59. Wingate got hot and started to chip away at the lead the next couple of minutes as Erin Johannes scored four points and Tricia Peckham scored eight points to cut PC's lead to 73-69 with two minutes left. With :56 left, Wingate tied the game at 74-74. Leopard went down and hit a two-foot jumper with :46 seconds left. Peckham of Wingate, got called for traveling and Neumann missed a shot with :26 seconds left. Peckham hit a driving layup to tie the game again at 76-76, and Sloan was charged with a foul with :03 seconds left. Peckham hit the first free-throw to give Wingate its first lead of the game and the win 77-76.

Peckham scored a game high 33 points. She scored 31 of Wingate's 51 points in the second half and grabbed four rebounds. Wingate shot 61 percent from the field as they made 27 field goals.

"This was a super year and everybody play hard throughout the year," said Couture.

New Majors

PC to extend students' opportunities

by Allen Handleman
Staff Writer

PC students have been clamoring for an expansion of available majors. Journalism, some croon. Communications, some demand. PC has taken steps to scratch the itch and shut the begging mouths of demanding students, even if those mouths are shut aghast. A list of tentative future majors has been released by the Registrar's office. Some are listed below, by related department.

Economics: Swashbuckling has been added for economists with a patched eye for the unorthodox. Courses will be taught by Doctor Jorge "Weird-Beard" Stubble. Students will "learn the ropes of all that is plunder and terror." Tentative classes advise students on choosing first mates, killing them in advance, determining which gangly limb is best replaced with a wooden post and/or rusty hook, and cursing the children of one's captors immediately before execution by hanging. Tentative texts are Stevenson's Treasure Island, Kidnapped, and Dumas' The Three Musketeers.

"However," warned Doctor Stubble, with a waggle of the beard, "swashbuckling isn't all sea-legs and swarthy grins. It's about landing on islands, Deserted islands. And burying booty... that is, 'investing,' yes, excellent Jorge. And forgetting about the booty, and fleeing from mutiny and local wildlife."

To bring these elements to life, Doctor Stubble will invite students to the chalkboard, where they will engage in impromptu dissention; wild dogs and bees will sporadically flood the classroom during final exams.

Political Science: Filibustering will be taught by Senator Strom Thurmond, who expired tragically during a spectacular filibuster, in which he resorted to reading the local phone book. His official cause of death is "absolute boredom," a still-mortal blow for citizens born before proper vaccinations. Death has not fazed Senator Thurmond, and his body lives an active political life, professed by Guinness to be the world's "(l)ongest and most-elloquent post-mortem twitch."

When asked about his teaching techniques, he never shut up. We left awkwardly.

Religion and Philosophy: Dooomscreaming will be available by all semester of the 1999-2000 term. Not only will students learn the history and intricacies of doomscreaming, but they will devise new methods of doomscreaming to carry the profession well into the 21st Century.

"Or will they!?" screamed Dr. Aaron Paul Calips. "You never know! You never know, but I know, and the world will quake under the Lord's grinding knee, and the sinners will claw the sky as a thousand hornets pierce their flesh!" Later inquiry revealed that this remark does not refer to Swashbuckling majors taking their final exams.

Doctor Calips believes the timing for his first (and assumedly only) semester at PC is vital to his students' success.

In calmer tones, he added, "Students will be fresh from the Screamatorium... that's what I call the classroom, you see, and they'll be able to scream doom like no other prophet currently on the market. That's the upside. On the downside, they'll have a few brief weeks of employment before the whole earth folds its paws under, and... and... burns blue-red-BURNING with the wrath of the unforgiving, the Angered, the —"

He continued for some time.

Classroom space for these majors has already been acquired. Neville Hall's second floor has gracefully opened its doors and packed its books in honor of the new studies.

Administration announces changes for new millenium

by Matilda Jimenez
Senior Writer

In a recent memo to the student body at PC, the administrative staff announced several changes to PC's life for next year. These changes deal with many aspects of student life, from dorm assignments to drastic changes in the menu at GDH.

"I feel these changes are necessary to the well being of our students," said Joe Nixon, dean of students. "As the rest of the world moves into the next millennium, PC should follow suit."

The first change announced by Dean Nixon's office is a campus wide curfew, enforced by Publis Safety, that would require all PC students to be in their own dorm room with the light out by 10:00 p.m. during the week and by 11:00 p.m. on Fridays and Saturday nights.

"I want to be at home watching ER every Thursday night at ten o'clock, not chasing rowdy college kids around campus," said Nixon. "Besides I'm always missing Saturday Night Live to police fraternity court. I have a life, too, you know."

Another noticeable change will be in the menu at GDH. After attending a recent nutrition symposium in Monticello, WI, Ray Bell, manager of GDH definitely sees the need for a higher standard of nutrition.

"Students at PC must be digestively as well as mentally prepared for their classes," said Bell. "Next year we're going to start serving pickled turkey gizzards from Earl's Corner Store, roasted sparrow with the feathers slightly singed, seaweed and deep-fried eel skins. We're most excited about our Catfish night every Wednesday night. Students will have the opportunity to catch their own Bull Heads from PC pond and watch the blue ladies cook it any way they like right before their eyes."

Finally, Residence life announces that due to the increasing number of female students at PC, Smyth will revert to a male dorm, and Georgia will become the new upper-classmen female dorm.

"Georgia Hall really isn't so bad once you get used to it," said Mike Rosolino, director of residence life. "Besides the girls with all their little perfumes will make it smell nice."

Students file into the dining hall for Inter-galactic Dorm sign-ups. The new addition to campus will be completed for fall 2002, but student interest is high. The dorm will feature obstacle courses and futuristic, Jetsonesque robots, videophones and indoor hovercrafts.

POINT

Food service changes finally meet with campus-wide approval, gratitude

For years we have been begging the administration and food service committee and workers to deliver better quality selections in our beloved Greenville Dining Hall. Finally, the office heard and answered our cries. The administrative changes regarding food service are spectacular, and we hope to see more alternative choices in the future.

For those vegetarians among us, the seaweed entree is a nice addition to the veggie burgers and salads available before. It might even rope in some converts from the carnivorous persuasion. But for those who do enjoy partaking in a little meat, new recipes are also in abundance. Earl has been kind enough to offer his prized sparrow meal. It comes complete with feathers and is the best GDH option since the infamous beef/veal/pork fritters. And, lest we forget to mention the most tasty delicacy of the Laurens area, GDH now also offers as an appealing appetizer, raw minnows. If you love caviar and sushi, you will not be able to pass up this treat.

So, our hat goes off to the administration for following through with students' wishes. After all, that is what PC prides itself on. Just one more reason for us to be proud of ourselves and our institution. Clinton truly is a "city on the grow," and our very own dining hall is a prime example of the steps the area is taking to ensure that it keeps up with current standards.

Letters

Dear Editor,

I am outraged that a curfew will go into effect at Presbyterian College next year! I understand and stand in agreement of the visitation rules and the hours for members of the opposite sex to be in each other's dorm room, but the curfew is really too much. RHA is proposing that each student be in their dorm room with the door shut and the light off no later than 10:00 p.m. Sunday through Thursday and 11:00 p.m. on the weekends. The absurdity continues in the fact that we can't leave until after 7:00 a.m. the next morning. I realize we are small, private and Christian, but are we Bob Jones University?

We are adults — able to drive, smoke tobacco, marry without our parents' consent, vote, drink too much beer and bungee jump on our own free will. Can we not decide the appropriate hour for simply turning out our lamps at night?

If this curfew is an attempt to reduce sexual activity on campus, I present no finer example than President Clinton. He has achieved more than most PC students could in a lifetime — president of the United States, commander in chief of the most destructive army in the world, a golf course in his back yard, dinner parties with Barbara Streisand — and he is allotted the freedom of promiscuity. If PC students wish to be as successful as Mr. Clinton, shouldn't RHA take steps in the opposite direction of a curfew to ensure that PC graduates live up to Mr. Clinton's example?

I also see several problems that this policy will create. What if someone who lives in a dorm with half baths had to use the bathroom at 3:00 a.m. in the morning after drinking too much Surge and covertly staying up late to study for one of Dr. Newman's killer "Concepts of Physical Fitness" tests? Girls can't very easily use the bathroom out their windows! Besides, it is unhealthy for the human to have no access to latrine facilities for nine hours.

Then what about the Waffle Houses? Boasting of two of the most used Waffle Houses in the country existing 200 yards apart is one of the smallest towns in America creates a pride that only Clintonites and PC students can have. Doesn't RHA realize that PC students are at least 90% of the Waffle Houses' business and without their late night patronage, one of the Waffle Houses would be forced to shut down? Then Clinton would be just as mediocre as every other small town in South Carolina, and Deloris, the single mom with three kids who works at Waffle House #2, would be out of a job!

Not only would fine, local restaurants shut down, but the need for fraternity court would evaporate! Ten till 11:00 p.m. on Friday night is not the time to leave the Alpha Sigma Phi House, but the time to start partying with Pat and Bubba and the gang! Pretty soon, all the fraternity houses will go to pot.

Several other problems would also arise. What would the librarians do between the hours of 10:00 p.m. and midnight? When would Dr. Hobbie hold his Bible study? And when would Katy Tarter paint her fingernails that vast array of colors?

I am emphatically NOT in favor of the curfew policy! I urge all other PC students who are as outraged as I am to band together, hold demonstrations in front of the administration building, picket down by the gym, hold a prayer vigil in the chapel and flood all RHA members' mailboxes with angry letters demanding the guidelines be changed! I refuse to go into my room at 10:00 every night quietly!

Sincerely,
Stu Dent, Sophomore

Lake Orr ducks demand respect

by Annie Coltrane
Staff Writer

In a recent poll conducted by the Dean of Students' Office, students were asked to share their primary reason for choosing to attend Presbyterian College. Two percent responded that PC's exemplary academic reputation attracted them, 15% were drawn to PC's low student/faculty ratio and 27.873% favored PC's athletic programs. An overwhelming majority, 72%, enthusiastically replied that PC's most attractive attribute was, for them, the infamous ducks of Lake Orr.

Although many students claim to love these ducks, how many have actually cultivated an intimate relationship with their feathered friends?

"I see the same kids walk by every day, on their way to lunch, but they've never invited me to join them," said the short duck with a small brown spot on the right side of his beak. "I like macaroni pie just as much as the next guy."

"When it rains during the winter months, it gets pretty cold in the pond," said a rather plain looking female duck of average height. "I wouldn't mind if someone invited me to spend the night in their room. I would share my ouija board."

Other ducks complained that the students were too friendly, citing an incident in which two boys decided to join them for a swim one day.

"Those guys could've gotten hurt," said the lame duck. "What kind of idiots swim around in the snow without any clothes on! Probably freshmen."

The ducks took up residence at Lake Orr over fifty years ago, during a drought in the nearby town of Newberry. Currently, a water shortage is the least of Newberry's problems. Today the grand ducklings and great-grand-ducklings of the original migrants can be spotted merrily paddling around the pond's sparkling fountain.

When not frolicking in the water, PC's ducks enjoy sunbathing in the road. Twelve years ago, lobbying ducks convinced Public Safety to reduce the campus wide speed limit from 65 mph to 25 mph to ensure ample time for drivers to notice sunbathing ducks. Sadly, even this measure has not prevented tragedies from occurring. This year's fall semester alone saw three ducks partially paralyzed due to careless drivers.

"It isn't entirely the drivers' fault though," said the light brown duck with the crescent-shaped birthmark above his left ear. "Those three were just sitting ducks."

Traditionally, the ducks have been responsible for finding their own food. Most prefer seaweed and those little green grasshoppers with the fur on their legs that tickles as it goes down a duck's throat. Occasionally, the ducks consider themselves lucky ducks when the biology department casts their dissected earthworms in the general direction of the pond. The ducks also enjoy being fed by students who need to clean out their refrigerators.

"When the students clean out their refrigerators, we always get the leftovers that Molly, the campus dog, doesn't want," said the tall, tan, muscular duck with a missing feather which belongs on its second row of feathers on its left wing just below the misshapen yellow feather. "We like ramen noodles and fermented V8 juice, but we could live without the moldy bread. The green mold gives me indigestion."

Another annoyance of the ducks is certain faculty members walking dogs around the pond. The ducks feel that the canines pose a threat to the sanitation of the pond.

Several Lake Orr duck huddle around the edge of the pond. The ducks are rarely seen far from the pond's vicinity for fear of local drivers.

"We know dogs are color blind and we don't want to be mistaken for fire-hydrants," said one duck.

Since PC pond is located next to the infirmary, the ducks were also eager to express their thought about the health care center and its employees. One duck, who asked not to be named, succinctly labels them "quacks."

PC to lose valued administrator

Dr. David Gillespie, vice president of academic affairs and dean of faculty, attempts the tight rope walk at Parris Island's military camp. Gillespie announced his retirement last week. He will be leaving PC in August 1999. Gillespie chose to retire in order to have more time to pursue his outdoor and athletic interests that have lain dormant during his tenure at PC. Currently he is completing his physical training to qualify to try out for American Gladiators. Gillespie aspires to be a full-fledged Gladiator by Spring 2000 and to be a part of the Millennium Traveling Team.

PC men's basketball rallies over Duke, 89-64

by Henry Daggett
Sports Guru

The city of Clinton was painted red and blue after PC had its biggest win ever, 89-64, last Saturday at Cameron Indoor against number one-ranked Duke of the Atlantic Coast Conference. PC's win stopped Duke's current 29 game winning streak and also snapped its 71 game winning streak over Non-Division I opponents.

"This is the biggest career win for me," said coach Gregg Nibert.

Nibert did not know what to do after the final buzzer. He looked like Jimmy V. after N.C. State had won the NCAA Tournament. Nibert was seen headed for the nets with a pair of scissors before security stepped in and escorted him back to the locker room.

"This is a way to top off my college career," said NBA-bound Eric Burrow.

"What I was most worried about was Duke's fast, explosive offense after they get a rebound," said Nibert.

Duke can do just about everything right: penetrate to the basket and kick it out for a three-pointer or go inside to Elton Brand. But on this night, Duke did not have an answer.

The most interesting matchup of the night was down inside, Brand versus Burrow. Both of these players will match up in the NBA, but this night belonged to Burrow. Burrow held Brand to nine points, five rebounds and 2 blocks. Burrow countered with a career-high 39 points, 17 rebounds and nine blocks.

"Burrow was unstoppable tonight, and his stock has risen come Draft Day," said Coach K.

Another interesting matchup of the night was the battle of the sixth man, Corey Maggette versus Cochrcroft. Maggette is a high-flying freshman out of Chicago who is known for his wild dunks and coming off the bench scoring in double-figures just about every game. Well, Maggette, go back to high-school, because Cochrcroft took you to school. On one of the most memorable plays I have ever seen, Maggette took off from the free-throw line getting ready to dunk when Cochrcroft stepped in the lane, blocked the basketball and knocked the freshman to the ground. All of the "Cameron Crazies" called for a foul--yeah right. The freshman got a technical while arguing with the ref as the PC bench went ecstatic. Maggette ended up with seven points while Cochrcroft scored 22 points in the win.

Duke came out running in the first half until Coach K lost his cool and got a technical foul for throwing a chair on the court. I thought that was Bobby Knight of Indiana throwing the chair from the crowd. I am surprised Coach K did not take an early exit, but give me a break; Duke gets too much respect. The game was tied when this incident occurred. Byron Graham sunk a free-throw and then hit a three-pointer to give PC a 34-31 halftime lead.

In the locker room, the PC team was so up that you thought they had just won the Division II Championship. There were high-fives and cheering, but Coach Nibert had to remind the team that this was Duke and there was still another half.

In the second half, Duke came out slow and PC pushed its lead to 17 on a three-point shot by Cochrcroft. As the lead increased, the "Cameron Crazies" exited for an early party night.

As the final buzzer went off, this was Duke's worst loss in 17 years.

"This was the worst loss I have ever been a part of over the last four years," said CBA-bound Trajon Langdon.

As ESPN's Sportscenter came on, Dick Vitale was in the background, sobbing. Duke being Vitale's favorite team. Vitale was stunned, with no words to describe the loss. Wow, Vitale finally speechless, you will never see this again.

The world does not know how this stunning loss will hurt the number one seed in the ACC Tournament and eventually a top seed in the NCAA Tournament, but this has raised the spirit of the Blue Hose heading into the SAC Conference Tournament.

"I feel like I have just won the NCAA Tournament," said Cochrcroft. "I am going to Disney World."

Duke falls to 29-2, and PC moves on to a 20-9 overall record.

Women's basketball defeats Tennessee

by Nathan Newman
Senior Sports Writer

Winning three NCAA Championships and having seven All-Americans in the last three years is a dynasty for women's basketball. This is what the Lady Volunteers of Tennessee have done. Well last night these dynasty came crumbling down when little known PC knocked off the top rank Volunteers 77-67.

"This was the worst I have ever seen my team play," said head coach Pat Summitt.

"I am ecstatic on the way how this team pulled together and defeated a powerhouse in women's basketball," said Beth Couture.

PC was led by Rachel Sloan's 23 points and 14 rebounds. Toni Leopard also scored 21 points and pulled down ten rebounds.

PC rushed out early to a seven to two run and never looked back. PC held All-American Chamique Holdseclaw to a year low of four points and now rebounds.

"This was a huge win and I can't believe that this happened," Sloan.

Tennessee now drops to 28-2 and PC goes to 23-4. PC starts the SAC Tournament as the number one seed and Tennessee is the number one seed in the SEC Tournament.

"Our players hustled, and scored when they got the opportunity," said Couture. "Next year I think we will play Louisiana Tech and Purdue."

Baseball team launches new promotions for 1999

by Howard Singleton
Staff Writer

The Blue Hose Baseball Complex has seen its share of ups and downs this season. Senior leadership on and off the field, great teamwork, outstanding players, and newcomers to the team have all contributed to a season of success. A lot of the contribution to this squad's success this year is due to the Presbyterian College and Clinton community fans. Without the fans, there would be no excitement and no motivation to perform for the players.

The rallying behind the team this year is due, in part, to the prizes and incentives available for attending the games, ranging from free pizza to gift certificates at local restaurants. With the recent success of this program, the team has decided on more exciting prizes, contests, and speciality days out at the field for the remainder of the 1999 season.

"As a freshman on the team, each fan gives me more and more pride for my team. I am excited about the new baseball game festivities. I think that I have a fighting chance of winning those contests also!" said Mark Dudley.

During the month of April, contests will be held between games on those late afternoons of double headers. The famous PC grounds crew will come out to show their racing skills in the first annual Lawnmower Race. Fans and players as well can enjoy the action with the Tobacco-Spitting Contest (for you youth cancer conscious students, Big League Chew will be provided as an alternative to tobacco) and the Sunflowerseed eating Contest. Campus expresses concern over faculty religion requirement

Campus Life Editor

Article 3, Section 2 of PC's faculty handbook states,

"No Person shall be eligible to membership in the Faculty unless he/she is a member of a Christian Church and sympathetic with the basic purposes of the college as expressed in the preamble."

As long as Presbyterian College has existed, the policy requiring that its faculty and staff members must also be members of a Christian Church has been in effect. This policy would prevent George Eliot from teaching English, Albert Einstein from joining the gang in Richardson, Felix Mendelssohn from directing the orchestra or Jesus Christ from joining the religion department. However, this policy has played a vital role in shaping PC's tradition and dedication to the Christian faith.

Currently, the necessity and the "Christianity" of this policy is being debated in various faculty and student settings. To change the policy would take an action by the Board of Trustees after a recommendation from PC faculty, administration and students.

Dr. John V. Griffith, president, declined to comment on his position concerning the policy but stands in favor of the controversy over the issue.

"If it didn't come up, we would run the risk of becoming a narrowly dogmatic place," said Griffith. "That's not the kind of institution we are. We are always examining that best way to accomplish our vision in the Christian tradition."

One fact to consider is that 0.6% of PC students are members of non-Christian churches, 3.8% claim no religion at all and overwhelmingly 95.6% associate themselves with Christian traditions, mostly Baptists and Presbyterians. Should statistics of faculty religious affiliation reflect that of the students, or is there a need for more diversity as PC continues to grow and look toward a new century?

Dr. Peter Hobbie, professor of religion, and Dr. Richard Baker, professor of philosophy, testify to the necessity of the policy.

"Candidates for faculty positions at Presbyterian College generally came from graduate institutions that place great emphasis on the American dream of success measured by original research in a specialized field," said Hobbie. "Only persons of faith, candidates who acknowledge the authority that lies behind the principles for which Presbyterian College exists can withstand these cultural pressures and work to uphold the distinctive standards of the college."

"An explicit enforceable hiring policy helps to procure a faculty who believe that faith and learning are mutually edifying, that teaching is a sacred calling and that we are called to serve as a part of a community of teaching and learning," he said.

Several students also agreed.

"I think [the policy] is very important, especially if PC is going to remain a church-related college," said Chris Denny, senior. "According to the mission statement we have, we're going to educate people in a Christian framework, therefore, we need Christian leaders."

Other faculty members and students disagree, citing the restrictions and limitations that the policy places on faculty, staff and students.

"What bothers me more than anything else is that people choose to live in a restrictive atmosphere," said Dr. Terry Barr, professor of English. "I think that people who want to keep this policy don't understand the hurt they cause. Essentially, it's hearing the words: 'We don't want you because of who you are.'"

"Students sense something is missing by the religion requirement, there is something unjust or unfair in the requirement," said Dr. Greg Henley, chaplain.

Many students side with Henley and Barr. "I don't like [the policy] because that puts up boundaries, and you could have a totally awesome teacher that isn't a member of a Christian church," said Sarah Talley, freshman. "You're limiting yourself to certain groups of people."

"I don't understand the reasons behind it because it is limiting the college and the students," said Nikki Richardson, junior. "It's like the time when people wouldn't hire females or people of other races even though they were more qualified."

Henley had further comments on this aspect. "Emphasis on education is a hallmark of Presbyterianism," he said. "It can be argued that the requirement is going against religious tradition because it draws the circle too small, the boundaries too narrow."

But the rest of the religious faculty answered this charge of PC's lack of diversity.

"Some people seem to assume that higher education should be a cookie-cutter world where every college has the same profile," said Dr. George Ramsey. "In the name of higher diversity in American education, we need more colleges which take seriously the mission of representing the very best in Christian tradition. Diversity within the field of higher education is as important as diversity within a given institution."

Those against the policy also argue that the perseverance of the requirement is largely a result of fear.

"A fear is that if we took away the requirement we would have evangelical atheists become faculty at this school and would undermine the mission and purpose of the school," said Henley. "Why could we ever want to hire someone whose task it is to undermine the institution which pays them?"

"Much of the policy is based on fear," said Barr. "It seems that people seem to fear that if we have people teaching on campus, they would change the faith of the people here. If our faith cannot be tested, what is faith?"

One aspect of the debate is the relevance of the necessity for the requirement in departments other than religion or possibly English.

"Religion doesn't matter a hill of beans to Chemistry," said Dr. Ed Gonge, professor of chemistry. "It doesn't matter whether I'm Baptist, Presbyterian or Buddhist as far as chemistry is concerned. Science can be taught from an atheistic view."

Dr. Daniel Hiltgen, professor of physics, agrees that his religious views have never been an issue in the classroom, but added, "physics still has to be taught at a Christian institution."

"Some people might argue that if a person has expertise in biology or economics, the question of her religious faith is irrelevant to the teaching profession," said Ramsey. "This argument presumes that teaching/professing is merely a matter of classroom academic performance. We are not merely instructors, responsible for transmitting a body of knowledge or for training students in certain technical skills. Because this is a college founded on Christian principles, there is concern for the whole person, and we believe that a teacher's interaction with students rightfully embraces dimensions of the person that extend far beyond the classroom."

Another aspect of the debate focuses on the requirement's role in the school's vision of creating a center of world culture.

"One of the objectives of the center for world culture will be to give our students an opportunity to understand customs of other people, which means their government, their religion, etc.," said Griffith. "The plan is an expanded opportunity for students to have global education which raises the question: Does the requirement diminish our ability to do that?"

"It would seem to me somewhat absurd for a center for world cultures [to keep the policy]," said Barr. "How would we do that if we only do that from the Christian perspective? I find that hard to reconcile."

Finally, the ultimate question: does the policy stay or go?

"If Presbyterian College values liberal arts, community and service, then it must protect those values," said Hobbie. "The surest protection lies in the acknowledgement of the faculty of the faith that supports the Christian world view. Without that authority, the Christian perspective and the values it upholds have no lasting foundation at PC."

"Hiring someone new would be mutually beneficial to the institution and faculty member who wasn't a member of a Christian church," said Henley.

"As long as the value of education remains high, you should keep the policy," said Rhea Faris, freshman. "As soon as the quality drops, change the policy. I think if you have two teachers with equal ability, choose the Christian because of the heritage of the school."

Freshman, Elise Sturdivant, is "absolutely not" in favor of the policy.

"Do you realize how ridiculous it is that Stephen Spielberg could not teach a theater class here?" she said.

"I like it here that no matter what class I'm in, my professor has the same basic ideas to help one such as a Christian and a student," said Michael York, sophomore. "If we didn't have the rule in effect, we could one day end up with a non-Christian president that could break the college ties to the church."

"When I look at PC, I don't see it as a Christian school," said Richardson. "I see it as a place of growth."

"Colleges that have abandoned such a policy have, within a generation, become largely secular in character, with only a nominal vestige of religious community," said Baker. "Without such a policy, there is great danger that we will drift down that well-worn path toward secularization and to a diminished concern for service, integration of learning, community and welfare of the whole student."

"Since we expose ourselves to so much, I don't understand why we're clinging to this," said Barr. "I am utterly against that policy. I will continue to fight to see that it is changed."

Quilters glorifies hard work of America's women

by Tara Sluder
Staff Writer

On the nights of March 24-27, an ensemble of seven ladies performed Quilters, a nationally renowned play celebrating the struggles and triumphs of pioneer women.

Coincidentally occurring during women's history month, Quilters appropriately combined drama, music and dance to create a moving portrayal of the lives of hardworking prairie women.

"We wanted people to realize what times were like then for women," said Lieshe Middleton, cast member. "These were real life struggles and situations that women faced. Life is easy now compared to then."

Director Dr. Arlene Beibeshimer and Designer Lesley Preston worked alongside a cast of seven ladies, including Kerry Cottingham, Susan Freeman, Celeste McKinney, Lieshe Middleton, Rachel Reiff, Nikki Richardson and Cindi-Jean Smith to put Quilters on stage.

"This play was structured around quilt blocks," said Preston. "The scenes were identified by the different blocks of quilts that came together to make a whole piece. We tried to incorporate the skillful yet simple craftsmanship that goes into a quilt into the set."

The ladies began practicing in early February, putting in four three-hour practices a week. As the performance time approached, they practiced four hours nightly.

"Preparing for this play was very time-consuming," said Reiff, "but I'm glad that I did it. I think the performances reflected how much time we spent practicing."

The set was fairly simplistic, yet appropriate for the time period. The quilting theme was carried out even through the scenery. The wooden floor was stained to resemble the quilt that was put together throughout the course of the play. The finished quilt was revealed at the end in a moving scene celebrating all the memories and hard work that the quilt represented.

"Everything that went into those quilts—all the materials—were really parts of their lives," said Reiff. "Each piece brings back memories of different times in their lives."

A small orchestra consisting of a piano, a violin and a bass sat on the stage during the course of the play. The orchestra accompanied the ladies and provided sound effects.

"I really enjoyed the music," said Lucy French, freshman. "The harmonies were excellent, and the sound effects by the orchestra made the play more realistic."

Students, faculty and community members filled the seats in Caldwell Harper Theatre each performance night. The audience came with expectations of an entertaining and dramatic evening and left more than satisfied.

"The play was wonderful," said Vaughn Carter, freshman. "You could definitely tell that there was a lot of hard work put into the play. The scenery was simple, yet powerful. I especially liked the wooden floor stained like the quilt patterns."

Alumni and friends of the Presbyterian College Theater Company celebrated the Harper Center's sixth year at the Gala Celebration held on Saturday. Events such as a gallery talk, quilting workshop and dinner and reception preceded Saturday night's performance of Quilters. After the play, guests met and talked with the cast and crew.

The gallery directors found quilts from around the state and exhibited their quilts in the gallery to go along with the play and Gala Celebration. The exhibiting artists led the gallery talk, tour and quilting workshop.

The cast, crew, and audience members alike gained an appreciation of the strength and courage possessed by the pioneering women of the past.

"So much goes into people's lives and their work," said Freeman. "In the end, however, all the hard work pays off because the hard times are also full of good times."

Randall brings additions to campus

by Hank Coleman
Staff Writer

Past and present PC students eventually come across the desk of Randy Randall, director of alumni associations, to make the college's future a better place. Randall has been with Presbyterian College since graduating from PC in 1975. He was the director of student activities and was in charge of Springs Campus Center, intramurals, entertainment, etc. until moving to the alumni office just last school year.

He has actually held both jobs before switching back after a brief career in commercial printing.

"It would be great to work in Student Activities for two years and then in the alumni office for two years and keep switching back," said Randall. "That way I would already know a lot of the alumni."

Randall has made many contributions to Presbyterian College. While as a student at PC, Randall played basketball for two years. After he graduated, he then started the first women's basketball team at PC in 1977 and also served as the coach. Randall led the project to renovate Springs in 1984 and helped start intramurals at PC. He has also started the Student Alumni Council which sponsors Homecoming, Youth Day, Alumni Socials and the Senior Alumni Dinner.

As the director of alumni associations, Randall helps the alumni stay in touch with the school and keeps them informed through the PC Magazine. He is working to boost the annual alumni giving from 42% to 60% in the next couple of years. Randall also serves as PC's representative as a member of the Clinton City Council. Outside of PC, Randall is very involved with the Lauren's County Community Theater and sings with the Palmetto Master-Singers.

The alumni affect PC greatly by giving money to support programs, construct buildings, offer scholarships, etc. They are essentially investing in the alma mater, and no one has a greater impact on the alumni than the director, Randy Randall.

"The way I see it, the better PC looks, the better all of our diplomas look," he said.

Interview: David LaMotte

Ben Acton: How long have you been singing/songwriting?
David LaMotte: Well singing, right off, when I was born...ever since I was a little one I've always loved to sing. Actually I wrote [my first] song when I was in first or second grade for this girl I was really taken with, and it was really, really bad. The first song that I wrote that I still play is Song for You. I wrote that when I was about fifteen.

Acton: What is it about music that you chose it as the medium to express yourself? Why not poetry or prose?

LaMotte: Why not psychology? (Laughter) Music stirs me more deeply than anything else. Music stirs me profoundly and always has. The other things that stir me in life are built on a long term relationship. With music you can bypass the small talk. So often after shows I can have important conversations with people. That's really profound. You can have a real conversation right off. We're allowed to say things in song that we are not allowed to say in conversation.

Acton: How would you describe your music?

LaMotte: It happens fairly often that I'm on an airplane and someone sees me store my guitar in the overhead bin, and they ask me what kind of music I play. I usually tell them it's called new folk, although that's totally oxymoronic phrase. (Laughter) If people are not familiar with underground folk singer thing, most people know who James Taylor is, so I tell them that it's sort of like that but with a little more funk. But I hate to do that, because I don't want to sound like James Taylor. I like his music, but I don't want to be him.

Acton: You've played all over the country, where is your favorite place to play (besides PC)?

LaMotte: (Laughing) Naturally Clinton. But the Gray Eagle (in Black Mountain) was my favorite place to play. But it's gone. The guys who owned the club will be opening up a new place in Asheville.

Acton: You characterize yourself as an "underground" folk singer. Is that a regret, do you wish your career was more in the mainstream?

LaMotte: No. It's funny, for years and years I've been telling people I definitely didn't want that. Now I've entertained the idea more than I ever have. But I still haven't taken any steps to try and have that. I'm so happy doing what I'm doing, in all honesty. The one thing that's changing that for me is watching Sean Mullins, who is a buddy of mine. Sean opened up for me at a concert about a year and a half ago. I opened for him and he opened for me. I haven't talked to him since his big break, but it's been really fun watching Sean. It's so nice to be happy where I am and feel like I can rejoice with him with a clean heart. I think it would be just as stupid seeking fame as to be slaving away in an office building for the payoff of retirement. If you're not enjoying these days, you might be making some mistakes. I'm pretty happy.

Acton: What is it you want people to take away from your music?

LaMotte: That's a really good question. I want to give you the full honest answer and part of that is fairly noble and part of it is real and human. I would love for to write songs that have spaces, so that people's lives can intersect the songs. Songs only have meaning when put your life into them. If people associate my songs with important things in their life, that's a deep honor, that's big for me. I want people to remember my music and me, as kind. I love that Vonmigt thing in God Bless You Mr. Rosewater. There's this great monologue where Rosewater is baptizing these babies and he says, "Babies, welcome to the world. It's big, it's mostly wet," and there's more to it, but he concludes by saying "OK babies, you're alive now babies go and live your lives. And damn it babies be kind." And it's so dumb and it's so beautiful at the same time. I also want people to think my songs have some depth, that on the second or third look at the song they keep finding stuff they like.

Acton: When was the last time you cut your hair?

LaMotte: (Laughter) In my new press packet, my sister came up with the line, "It's been eight years since David LaMotte has had a real haircut or real job". It's actually been longer than that, but the line was just so good.

Douce looks ahead to trip west, seminary

by Rachel Jernigan
Staff Writer

She calls Tipton, GA home, is a coordinator for SVS and confesses a weakness for York Peppermint Patties. This edition's Senior Spotlight shines on Tonya Douce.

The English/Religion/Philosophy major came to PC for several reasons.

"I liked the friendliness of it, and I got this feeling. After I visited, everything seemed to fall into place," she said.

Since arriving here, Tonya has become involved in many of the organizations on campus. She has worked for four years with SVS through the program Laurens Young at Heart, wrote for the yearbook and was a Stirling. However, she calls her work with Young Life in Clinton, "my passion—the big thing that I'm into." Douce also plays intramurals and is a member of Team Tonka, which she describes as a group of friends who put together a team for fun and who try to play as many sports as possible.

Tonya also had the experience of studying abroad in the spring of last year. She traveled for three weeks in Ireland and other destinations in Europe. The trip provided the 22-year-old a chance to learn about herself and experience a totally different lifestyle (she only washed clothes once). Learning the differences between the European and American educational system also interested Douce. The beauty of Ireland as well as the opportunity to meet new people added to what she calls, "one of the best experiences of my life."

Name: Tonya Douce
Hometown: Tipton, GA
Majors: English and Religion/Philosophy

In her spare time, Tonya likes to hang out with friends and participate in camping and hiking. With graduation rapidly approaching, she is considering several options for the future. Douce wants to go to seminary, but may take a year off to go out West and possibly participate in Americore. When asked what she will miss most about PC, Tonya describes the close-knit community of students and professors. She loves how open the entire faculty is and how involved they are on campus. Douce also offers up some sage advice for underclassmen.

"Make the most of every opportunity, have a balanced life, and try to do something different," she said.

Bernice Hall and Rosemary Scurry are the housekeepers for Moorefield House, Belk Auditorium, Edmunds Hall and Douglas House.

Bernice Hall is from Clinton, SC. She enjoys reading the Bible and visiting Florida and New Orleans. She is a certified nursing assistant who used to work at the Presbyterian Home. Hall says that life at the Home was "sad."

"It required a lot of patience. This job [at PC] offers me peace of mind," she said.

Hall is the Secretary of the Choir at Little River Zion Baptist.

"She has a beautiful alto voice," said Scurry.

A Mountville, SC native, Scurry works alongside of Hall. She enjoys running, watching the news, and visiting Savannah and Atlanta in her spare time. Scurry worked at the Greenville Mill for 18 years before coming to PC. Scurry loves the PC people and remembers how kind Dr. Gaines was to them.

"He was a person you could talk to, and he set in a little fun," said Scurry.

Scurry also said that she is often teased that if she "keeps it up, I will learn how to play the piano in a while." Students and faculty that have connections to these two ladies have high praise for both of them.

"No matter what kind of day they have, they are always happy, smiling and polite," said Ms. Betty Harris. "Rosemary keeps her grandchildren and never complains about all her work."

"They talk about their family a lot, and both are very sweet tempered," said Lane Jeselnik. "Rosemary's just the cutest lady."

"They're wonderful people," said Ms. Sara Mooney. "They are conscientious in what they do. They are always happy. We're so glad to have them in the music department at PC."

"They're awesome ladies; you know, easy to talk to," said Patti Carson. "Sometimes they have had to come in [to Moorefield house] when it's a mess, and we will apologize, and they say, 'Girls we don't care; we love y'all.' They gave us [the Moorefield residents] a Christmas card and candy; it was so sweet. They're real easy going and laid back, just awesome ladies."

CHAMPS prepares for active summer

by Ben Acton
Managing Editor

This June some new and interesting students will be spending time in the dorms, classrooms, and other campus facilities of PC. And that does not include college students attending summer classes.

Most of the new faces will belong to CHAMPS, the collaborative program between PC and the Clinton/Laurens community designed to cultivate the leadership and educational potential of children in the community. As part of its role in CHAMPS, PC will once again host the program's summer event, in which the CHAMPS student come to PC to live and learn about the values of education. Assisting the students in these efforts are area school teachers, volunteers and members of the PC faculty and staff.

The student body of the college also participates in the program by serving as mentors to the CHAMPS students both for the summer event and for follow up programs that occur during the following school year. This year CHAMPS welcomes several new mentors, which excites Dr. Jerman Disasa, CHAMPS director and PC professor of Education and director of special projects.

"We have an incredible group of people [working as mentors]," said Disasa. "They have all shown a great eagerness to work and lead."

Disasa also commented on the overall encouragement and acceptance that the community and the college has given CHAMPS over the program's five years of existence.

"CHAMPS is already known in the community; they include us in the decision making," he said. "That is very positive. Also I have been very pleased with the [PC] campus, in the way people recognize the program and it's value. I have no hesitation to ask any segment of the college or community to take part in or assist CHAMPS in finding solutions for common problems."

One of the problems CHAMPS will be facing this summer is how to encourage positive habits in the lives of the CHAMPS students. In fact, the theme of this summer's program is "Building Healthy Habits: Mind, Body, and Spirit." Although speakers and field trips have not yet been planned for this summer, Disasa and the CHAMPS mentors are eager to contribute their ideas and experiences to the program.

"I think my experience coming from and growing up in Atlanta is important for me to share with these kids," said Anna Beale, one of the new CHAMPS mentors. "Hopefully my experience can encourage them and show them part of a world outside of Clinton."

"CHAMPS lets you have a chance to tell people you can do whatever you want to do," added Rachel Sloan, another new mentor.

The mentors are also willing to ensure that the fun and excitement of CHAMPS extends far beyond the summer.

"Being a mentor offers me the chance to be involved in the community and help other children make themselves better by learning and growing to become productive members of society," said mentor Tanisha Jenkins.

Mentor Josh Fowler agreed, adding, "If I knew I helped one kid [to succeed], that makes being a mentor worth it."

PC hosts Area Five Special Olympics

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

PC hosted the 25 annual Area 5 Special Olympics last Friday. Athletes from two counties competed in throwing, racing and team competitions during the morning.

This year 193 athletes registered, the second largest amount ever. The Special Olympics had 233 total volunteers. Sixty volunteers came from the community, Teacher Cadets, Girl Scout Troop 253, Newberry College and the Key Club from Thornwell.

This was a very special occasion for Area 5. Nine of the participants will travel to the World Special Olympics in the Raleigh-Durham area later on this summer. These athletes will be competing against other Special Olympians from all over the world. The Games Management Team wanted to get these athletes ready and prepared for the World Special Olympics.

Volunteers got up early in the morning to start setting up for the games. Athletes came around nine in the morning. The athletes were welcomed by Dean David Gillespie. After this, the Clinton Police Department ran the torch around the track and handed it off to the athletes as they made their way around the track for the Opening Ceremonies. As the athletes competed, the Olympic Village was open. Organizations, fraternities and sororities each had a booth consisting of games from basketball shooting to pie-throwing contests.

After all this was over, each athlete got a bag lunch to enjoy all of their memories of the day. The volunteers were treated to a pizza party after the days events. Every special athlete went home as a winner with special memories of the day.

One service aspect of the games was held the day before when the Games Management Team asked students to make an extra swipe on their cards so that each athlete was able to get a candy bar in their bagged lunches. This was very successful as many students in Springs gave a little extra to help out the Special Olympics.

"This was a very special year for all of us," said Shelia Hill, head of Student Volunteer Services. "The Games Management Team, Elizabeth Soileau and all the volunteers who took their time to help these athletes enjoy a successful day."

Women's tennis team ranked first

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The women's tennis team is blazing past the competition in the SAC. With a 16-3 overall record and 6-0 record the team is hoping for a National Conference Tournament Championship and a bid to the NCAA Regional Tournament. The team is ranked number two in the regional rankings.

On April 11, the Blue Hose defeated Kennesaw State 5-4. PC lost their first three single matches, all of which went to three sets. PC came back by winning the last three singles matches and two of three double matches. Kelly Fitzpatrick and Robyn Loveless came together in the doubles and pulled out a tough victory 9-7. Heather Combs and Kelli Kirkland were the other doubles team to win. In singles Combs, Allison Merritt, and Sunny Armstrong were victorious.

"I feel like the team has been so successful this season due to our friendship," said Loveless. "We are all truly companions on and off of the court and this makes us play not only for ourselves but the team."

On April 1, the Blue Hose downed Wingate 8-1. Loveless, Fitzpatrick, Clayton McGee, Merritt, and Sunny Armstrong each won their single matches. PC swept the doubles by only giving up four games in three matches. Loveless/Fitzpatrick and Combs/Kirkland each won their double matches 8-0. Armstrong/McGee won 8-4.

"We have a young and talented team this year," said head coach Donna Arnold. "I feel good about the upcoming SAC Tournament so we just need to continue to play strong tennis like we have done all year."

The team won the SAC match held April 17 against Bloomsburg. Bloomsburg was ranked first going into the match with the Lady Blue Hose following closely at second. The Lady Blue Hose were victorious over the Bloomsburg team, 6-3, therefore putting them in first place.

Junior Alex Sawyer works the Free Throw booth at Olympic Town. After the games ended, the athletes went to Olympic Town to play games, eat lunch and listen to music. The day concluded at 1 p.m.

Blue Hose men's tennis looks for victory in SAC Tournament

by Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

With the SAC regular season champions title under their belt, the Blue Hose men's tennis team focuses on the final matches of the season and the SAC Tournament. Up to this point in the season, the team has not lost a conference match and has a 5-0 record in the SAC and an overall record of 12-8. Last season, the team went undefeated in the SAC Tournament, beating Lenoir-Rhyne, Wingate and Carson-Newman all 5-0.

The team won a close match against Carson-Newman College on Saturday, April 10 to win the Conference regular season title. Sophomore Donny Thorson, playing in the number one singles position mutilated his opponent in a quick match 6-0, 6-1. Preston Menning, senior, edged past his opponent in a close match resulting in a 7-6, 6-2 win. Senior Chuck Webb playing fourth rallied to win for the team with a final score of 6-1, 7-6. Will Stewart, senior had a big win for the team, coming up strong the first and final set. He was outscored the first set 4-6, but unfazed, Stewart came back with a strong second and third set, winning both of them 6-2. In doubles, the top two doubles teams, Loftis/Menning were victorious in their match, 9-8, as well as doubles team Stewart/Webb who defeated the Carson-Newman opponents 8-6. Overall, PC won 3 of the 6 singles matches, tying Carson-Newman, but won the match due to their victory in two of the three doubles matches.

"So far this year I am really excited about how our team has been playing and performing. We have accomplished a lot of the goals we set for this stage of the season such as beating Lees-McRae College on April 8, winning the regular season SAC, and beating Carson-Newman College this past Saturday," said Chuck Webb. "Right now, we have one last big match against Bloomsburg University, and then the SAC Tournament. We are all getting mentally and physically prepared to play to our fullest potential during these final weeks."

At this point in the NCAA Division II East Region Bloomsburg University in Charlotte NC is ranked number one, with PC in the number two spot and Lees-McRae in a close third. The top two teams in the region are given an automatic bid to play in the NCAA Division II National Tournament in Pomona, California. With a number one or two ranking, the teams automatically get to go to Nationals without actually having to play in the NCAA Division II Regional tournament. The Blue Hose are in prime position right now for this bid, so the team also has their sights set on this important tournament against Bloomsburg University. Last season, PC advanced to nationals and finished the season with a rank of 21.

"I feel confident about how the team is playing. We have been a strong team all year, and lately the team has just been very consistent and strong. Going into the Conference tournament, I feel that we have a great chance to win it and even go undefeated in the tournament. The whole team has terrific energy and we are definitely ready for the next step after the SAC Tournament. I have tremendous confidence in every single one of our players at this point," said Preston Menning.

The regular season closed with a match against Bloomsburg University on April 17th. The SAC Conference Tournament, a 3-day tournament, is April 22-24 in Salisbury, NC.

PC golf team fights for tournament victory

by Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

Led by Coach Tommy Addison, the Blue Hose golf team got second place in the Carter Invitational golf tournament at the Links of Oliver's Landing in Hickory, NC. PC played the USA "B" team for the first round in this tournament and beat them 4-1. The USA "B" team consisted of golfers from schools in the South Atlantic Conference. Mark Easley was the player from PC that was chosen as a member of this team. In the first round, Mark Easley beat sophomore Jay Biber 1 up. Then, Thomas Addison, Rawlings LaMotte, Russ Padgett and Jon Sjöström all defeated their opponents from the USA "B" team. Mars Hill was outplayed in the semifinal round when PC defeated them 3-2. Jay Biber defeated Steven Smith 3-2. The other winners for the Blue Hose were Russ Padgett and Jon Sjöström. After the second day of play, PC and Catawba College were tied at two matches each which gave PC a slot to play in the championship match the following day.

On Tuesday, April 13, the match resumed as PC took on Catawba. Jay Biber played a heart-breaking game against Catawba's Jamie Hall. The game was lost on the last hole when Catawba's putts sank and PC's did not. Three Blue Hose players won against their opponent: Rawlings LaMotte (5 and 3), Russ Padgett (1 up) and Jon Sjöström (3 and 2). However, Catawba took the tournament 3-2. This finish was the third time that the Blue Hose received 2nd place this year. At this point in the season,

by Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

Winning 15 out of the last 23 games, the Blue Hose baseball team is improving every game with the SAC Conference Tournament just around the corner. The team has not lost a game since the beginning of the year, but as the season progresses, the team's energy and teamwork could lead to more and more favorable outcomes.

After winning and losing one game each of a double-header with Gardner Webb on Saturday, April 10, PC comes back to beat the Bulldogs by a substantial amount, 13-4. This game was an outstanding one for the Blue Hose and everything came together with pitching, hitting and fielding. On the pitchers mound was sophomore Matt Martunas, who after pitching 6 innings of play gave up only a single unearned run. The third inning was PC's power inning with seven runs this inning due to 5 hits by the Blue Hose and also because of Gardner Webb's two wild pitches and an error on the field. Gardner Webb attempted to make up for this error filled inning but only scored one run in the fourth, after a run home and scored one of a wild pitch in the final inning. Besides these runs, PC rallied to score another six runs in the game. The Blue Hose scored these six runs during the 4th and 5th innings. The Blue Hose were hot on the bats that day, despite all efforts the Gardner Webb coach made to try to stop the hits. Gardner Webb used 5 pitchers during this game to no effect. PC at 35 at bats, made an outstanding 12 hits.

Catcher Brad Teal, junior, led the team offensively with one double, one single, scored two runs himself and rallied for two more RBIs. Junior Bucky O'Hara, playing first base, also added one double, two singles and ran across home plate twice. Coming up strong for the Blue Hose was second baseman Jamie Carter, junior, who scored one run, drove in one run, and hit two singles. Evan McDonald, junior, who drove in two additional RBIs. Humorous enough, one national record was set on the field this day. Brad Boleman went down in the NCAA Division II record books when he was hit by a pitch. It is his 57th of his career and is currently ranked third in the Division in history.

The two out of three games won by the Hose in their three game series April 17-18. Their last home game was Tuesday, April 20th. SAC tournament play began Wednesday, April 21.

PC is ranked number one in the SAC. The SAC tournament is being held at Catawba's home course, with Catawba ranked second behind PC going into the tournament. The competition will be strong, as Catawba won the tournament last year with PC coming in second. PC hopes to relive the tournaments of '96 and '97 when the Blue Hose won the title over second place Catawba.

"This past tournament was a heart-breaker. The boys played up to their fullest potential, Catawba just putted better than our team at the end. We are looking forward to the Conference tournament when we meet Catawba again. I am very confident in our boys for coming out of the SAC tournament with the title and going into the Regionals confident and strong. We are excited about next season. Every year the South Atlantic Conference teams are getting stronger and more competitive. I think the end of the season will turn out great and I am excited about our season next year, too," said Coach Tommy Addison.

The outlook for the 1999-2000 team is very favorable. The team is losing only one senior, Rawlings LaMotte, and returning the team's strongest players. They are also acquiring 4 new recruits with strong records from their high school golf teams.

"The year has really been a lot of fun. We have a young team, but the year has been really successful. We have come up with a lot of great finishes," said sophomore Jay Biber.

The conference tournament is just around the corner on April 22-25 in Salisbury, NC at the Country Club of Salisbury. Then, PC will be hosting the NCAA South Regionals at Cross Creek Plantation in Seneca, SC.

This series boosts their record to 23-22 overall and 9-6 in Conference play. The Blue Hose are ranked 4th currently in the SAC, but 5 more regular season games remain before the SAC tournament.

"Recently I have been so proud of our team on the field. Pitching has been stronger than ever this season with Kevin Felts, Matt Martunas, and Michael Burns, all three sophomores performing to their best ability. Offensively, Ty Bouknight and Roger Foltynowicz have come up strong for us at the plate. I give Bucky O'Hara a lot of credit as well. He has been performing extremely well the past month and a half, hitting a lot of doubles, home runs and RBIs. All of the team's play recently, especially these guys have given us the chance to compete in recent games," said Coach Kovash.

This past week, Kevin Felts was named SAC pitcher of the week. Felts is a 6'3", 185 lbs. right-handed pitcher from Winston Salem, NC who has been performing for the Blue Hose for two years. This year alone, he has pitched 63.2 innings, striking out 43 batters, pitching 3 complete games, and has an ERA of 3.25. In one of the games against Gardner Webb during the series, Felts struck out seven batters, and walked one to lead PC to a 4-0 victory against this SAC opponent.

Last year, PC was named the champion in the SAC. They hope to defend their title this year in the SAC tournament on April 21-25 in Salisbury, NC.

"We have an outside chance of winning the SAC. I have calculated it and if everything goes as well as it can, we can win the SAC tournament by a half of a game. This is a hope that we never thought possible at the beginning of the season. We got off to a slow start, but we have recovered well, winning 9 of the last 12 conference games. We have been playing very well recently and hopefully this confidence will carry with us into the SAC tournament. I am excited about the tournament and facing the teams that we played earlier in the season. We hope to leave the tournament with our second consecutive SAC tournament title," said Kovash.

The Blue Hose were victorious over Newberry in their three game series April 17-18. Their last home game was Tuesday, April 20th. SAC tournament play began Wednesday, April 21.

Softball team on solid ground entering 1999 SAC tournament

by Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

Blue Hose Softball, led by Coach Buster Sturkie, has been rallying it up the past two double-header showdowns at the Interim Park fields to ready them for the SAC Conference tournament. In the double-header against Gardner Webb University on Saturday, April 10, PC swept both games, the first 5-0 and the second 7-1. In the first game, the offense got a boost by with the power of freshman Beth Pearson with her three hits, in which she rallied up two doubles and also two runs scored. Jamie Carter, sophomore shortstop, also enhanced PC with her hitting ability, going 2 for 3. Pitching for the Blue Hose were Beth Pearson and senior Shannon Seigler, the lefty, with a 10 strikeouts and a four-hit shutout. Seigler picked up a win and improved her personal record for the season to 9-11.

In the second game of the match-up, pitcher Beth Pearson of PC took the win to improve her record to 6-7. She pitched the entire game and only gave up one earned run for five hits and struck out 10 batters. Second baseman sophomore Monica Choplin went four for four at the plate while hitting in one RBI and had a stolen base. Going two for three at the plate were second baseman sophomore, sophomore catcher Nicole Goodwin, freshman leftfielder Jennifer Henderson and sophomore shortstop Jamie Carter.

Two days later, on Monday, April 12th, the Blue Hose and Carson-Newman took a game apiece in their double-header played at home for PC. It was a battle of the Belts out on the pitchers mound during the first game of the series as freshman Beth Pearson faced up against Beth Ratliff of Carson-Newman. Pearson gave up only five hits, but Carson-Newman's starting pitcher gave up only two. However, Pearson picked up the win by the Blue Hose winning the game. Angie Mullins, playing first base for PC, picked up one of the hits and got an RBI. Pearson led the game offensively as well as defensively with her excellent batting skills. She tallied one of the hits and also scored a run. The final score was 3-1 with the Blue Hose topping Carson-Newman for the top spot.

In the second game, Sonya McNeil, centerfielder, and Monica Choplin, second baseman, saw all of the offensive action for the night. They each got two hits apiece and stole two bases each. McNeil scored PC's sole run of the game. Sophomore Christy Smith started the game for the Blue Hose in pitching, but didn't pitch a complete game, as Beth Pearson pitched the final two outs of the 7th inning after Smith pitched the first six and one-third innings. With these three wins, the team's record improves to 17-4 overall and 6-4 in the SAC.

"This year's team has come a long way since of the beginning of the season. At first, we started out with a kind of rough start, but as the season progressed, we have been coming together more and more now. We are hoping to do really well in the SAC tournament," said sophomore Jamie Carter.

Next year, the team will be losing only two seniors, Shannon Seigler and Mackenzie Bertam, while keeping a strong upcoming experienced squad. In the SAC right now Newberry College is ranked number one, and a lot of the other schools in the conference are tied for the remaining slots.

"This year, the SAC has been very unpredictable. In the conference games all throughout the season, teams that were thought of as the better ended up losing to the underdogs and vice-versa. So, we'll see what happens during the SAC Tournament. It should be interesting," said Carter.

PC plays against Catawba College for the final SAC game on Saturday, April 17 to confirm their ranking going into the conference tournament on April 21-25 in Salisbury, NC.

Residents, city administrators fight over student housing

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

While College administrators announced a new off-campus housing policy to go into effect in the fall of 2002, some PC students who currently lease houses in the neighborhood around the College find themselves in the middle of a legal battle that pits local residents against city administrators and landlords.

The College announced its new policy on Aug. 10 after residents of the neighborhood around PC attended a Clinton City Council meeting for the second month in a row and complained about the behavior of students living in their neighborhood. In particular, local residents—members of the so-called "Homeowner Task Force"—complained about traffic congestion, litter and noise violations resulting from late-night student parties, and they expressed concern about diminishing property values resulting from students' behavior.

"We believe that the disrespectful, indeed despicable, behavior of certain students in said housing is very demeaning to the community, and that such behavior detracts from property values of the homeowners—not to mention the noise, litter, disruption caused by the raucous parties held in said off-campus housing until all hours of the night," argued residents in a written statement drafted this past summer by the Calvert Avenue/Owens Street Homeowners' Association.

In order to curb such behavior, local residents urged city officials to enforce a 1994 city zoning ordinance that forbids any more than three unrelated individuals from residing together as a single housekeeping unit, unless such a residence has been approved as a group-occupied dwelling by the city Zoning Appeals Board.

Local residents believe that enforcement of the zoning ordinance will effectively clamp down on litter and noise violations.

"These folks aren't being unreasonable," said Dr. Bill Yarborough, professor of physics and a spokesman for local residents. "They're just concerned about property values and least three off-street parking spaces on their property and agree to maintain their property and to control noise and litter. Furthermore, no group-occupied dwelling may be permitted within 600 feet of an existing group-occupied dwelling.

Currently, the only landlord granted a permit to operate such a group-occupied dwelling is Yarborough, whose property at 400 Calvert Avenue was approved for use as a group-occupied dwelling last week. Other landlords who are currently housing more than three unrelated individuals in the same building are, therefore, technically in violation of the law.

At its July 12 meeting, the Clinton City Council voted unanimously to enforce the zoning ordinance. City Manager Charles Litchfield granted a six-month grace period for landlords to comply with city regulations and to apply for a permit to operate group-occupied dwellings. If landlords do not meet the requirements for operating a group-occupied dwelling by Jan. 1, the students who now live in such buildings will be forced to find alternative housing for the spring semester.

According to Joseph Nixon, dean of students, there are currently nine groups of four or five students who are living off-campus. Assuming that landlords do not meet the requirements to have their properties recognized as group-occupied dwellings, a total of nine students will probably be forced to find alternative housing.

Seniors Sylvia Dodd and Elizabeth Soileau, for example, live with two other students in a house on Centennial Street. If their landlord does not take the necessary steps to have the house approved as a group-occupied dwelling, then one of the four students may be forced to find another residence for next semester.

The students said that they didn't know where they would go if the zoning ordinance were enforced today.

The four students paid a lease on the property back in the spring of their sophomore year. According to the students, no one ever mentioned the zoning ordinance to them when they quality of life."

In order to be granted a permit to operate a group-occupied dwelling, the zoning ordinance states, landlords must first present an application to Roland Tidwell, the city building official and zoning administrator, and must also meet certain conditions of approval. Specifically, landlords must provide at

Zoning ordinance battle underscores need for mutual understanding between town, gown

The controversy over off-campus student housing underscores the need for both local residents and PC students to look at the housing issue from each other's perspectives and to communicate their concerns to each other in a civil and respectful fashion.

The concerns of local residents are understandable. While the majority of PC students cause little or no trouble for their neighbors, the behavior of a few PC students living off-campus has been at times completely unexcusable and, in fact, incompatible with the values and ideals of both Presbyterian College and liberal learning in general. The racous behavior of these few students is understandably more than an annoyance to local residents, who, at times, have had to endure not only noise violations, but diminishing property values, as well. It would behoove students to put themselves in the shoes of some local residents, many of whom are themselves PC graduates.

At the same time, the concerns of students are equally understandable. Students have had to endure scathing attacks in the local press on their character because of the irresponsible behavior of a few. Some have even had to face the prospect that they may in only a few months be forced to leave the homes for which they paid a lease months or even years ago because landlords failed to inform them of zoning ordinances. If local residents are victims of the zoning ordinance battle, then students are also victims. It certainly would behoove local residents to put themselves in the shoes of PC students, who as a group contribute immeasurably to the local community through volunteer services.

We at the Blue Stocking urge local residents to consider the needs of PC students living off-campus, and we urge students to consider the needs of local residents. It is only by civil and respectful communication and cooperation that residents, students and City officials can find a sensible and fair solution to the zoning crisis.

Letters to the Editor

Local residents, city officials treat students unfairly

Dear Editor,

I just returned from the meeting arranged by the college and the city to inform off-campus students what it means to be an informed neighbor. They gave us a lecture on parking and noise. Even though I am a life long resident of Clinton and own my own home, I feel that the public officials do not respect the students of PC as adults and citizens of the city. Even though most students are not technically residents of the city, they spend nine months of a year here. There are five parties involved in this dispute: the residents, the city officials, the school, the landlords and the students. I can understand the situation that the home owners have with loud noises and unlawful behavior occurring in their neighborhood. I think that they have every right to complain about this problem. They should call the police department and let appropriate actions be taken. I feel that the city should enforce the law, and appropriate punishments should follow for those that choose to ignore the law. I do not know how the landlords of the dwellings feel, but they are sure to lose money in the end since the college has implemented its new policy for incoming freshmen. The school is caught in the middle. They are trying to be good corporate citizens and yet want to please the people that pay the bills, the students. The college has to be here permanently and try to please their neighbors, however, if they do not please the students, eventually students will no longer recommend to their friends that they should come to PC. That leaves the students. The students are the ones getting shafted. Everyone feels that we have no choice in the matter. However, most citizens do not know the impact that the students of PC have in the community. We make up approximately 18 percent of the population of Clinton for nine months of the year. We make an enormous economic impact on the city. We also provide more countless volunteer hours within the community. I would venture to say that we provide more volunteer hours than the rest of the city combined. The Presbyterian College community provides almost all of the culture in this town, unless you consider poker machines and slot machines. We do have a voice. Most of us do not have the right to vote for our city officials, however, we can vote with our dollars and our service. The residents of Clinton need to learn of our commitment to community and actually what we do for the city. If the services and money by the PC community just quit existing, there would be a lot of citizens all around Clinton upset—not only the recipients of our volunteer hours, but the businesses that get our money.

Thank You
Vernon McCall

Orientation 1999 was a success! The new students' participation was superb and the hard work of the Orientation GUIDES, Student Government, faculty and administration brought about this success. The Orientation program ended on a high note when faculty and staff played a competitive but friendly game of softball while student spectators enjoyed a hotdog cookout. Even though those dreaded 8:00 a.m. classes have begun, the excitement of this year's student body is remarkable and contagious.

I would like to take this time to provide a small "sneak preview" of the Student Government's exciting goals for this year. Which student organization for the Student Union Board, improve the use of the Safe Ride Shuttle, examine the selection of "CHS," as well as the student behavior at these events, and examine a host of technology issues. Committees of the Student Government are working on these goals as well as many others. The 1999-2000 year will be an exciting and busy year for your new Student Government.

The Student Government has some empty seats! The freshmen class representation on the Student Government is essential. When PC's new students have fully settled in, the election process will begin. Following the five o'clock meeting on September 10, campaigning will begin for the freshmen class president and two representative positions. All freshmen that are interested in being officers for their class should speak with a Student Government member for more details.

On behalf of the Student Government, I extend my wish for everyone's success this academic year. We are honored and excited to be able to represent you this year and work to accomplish and resolve your concerns.

PC IN BRIEF

Mulhall named new public safety chief

Lt. Col. Lawrence P. Mulhall, who has served as Presbyterian College's professor of military science for the past two years and has more than 29 years experience in law enforcement and security, has been named PC's new chief of public safety.

He will replace Chief R. Grey Mayson, who retired on June 30 after 25 years of service to Presbyterian College.

"Mulhall brings a wide range of law enforcement, security, and criminal investigation experiences to his new post. These experiences, coupled with his success in leading the ROTC at PC for the past two years, made Mulhall a wonderful candidate for this position," said Morris Galloway, PC's acting vice president for administration and finance.

"I'm looking forward to joining the college's administrative staff and taking on this new responsibility," Mulhall said. "My family is also pleased to be able to stay here at PC and in Clinton."

PC named one of top Christian colleges in nation for 1999-2000

Presbyterian College has been named as one of "America's Best Christian Colleges" by Institutional Research and Evaluation Inc.

PC is one of 92 colleges and universities—and one of six PCUSA-related colleges—to make the IRE's eighth annual national survey.

Schools named to the list of America's Best Christian Colleges are accredited, four-year institutions offering bachelor degrees for both men and women. Recipients have full residential facilities, including residence halls and dining services and offer opportunities to qualified students for need-based, academic (merit)-based and athletic-based financial aid. They had an entering freshman class in the fall of 1997 with a high school grade point average (GPA) and/or SAT/ACT score equal to or above the national average for all entering college freshmen, and recipients are all affiliated with recognized Christian denominations.

The Blue Stocking is currently seeking a sports editor. The position includes a salary and is open to all PC students. For information or an application, call the Blue Stocking office at ext. 8488 or Dan Hart at ext. 8025.

Administration announces new on-campus housing policy

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-chief

In response to allegations of student misconduct in the residential area around Presbyterian College, college administrators last month reaffirmed their commitment to positive town-gown relations and announced that College officials had adopted a new housing policy to go into effect in the fall of 2002.

While the current housing policy stipulates that any senior is eligible to live off-campus, the new policy—which will not affect current seniors, juniors, or sophomores—stipulates that all available space in the College residence halls must be filled before any students are permitted to reside off-campus. After all available space in the residence halls has been filled, the College will hold a lottery among seniors in order to determine who is eligible for off-campus housing.

The College's announcement of the new housing policy came only days after residents of the neighborhood around PC complained to City Council about the behavior of students living in their neighborhood (see story on page 1). Discontent among local residents about the behavior of students living off-campus has allegedly been brewing for some time, and the College's new housing policy is intended, in part, to end the age-old hostilities between town and gown. According to an August 11 news release issued by the Presbyterian College public relations office, the College adopted the new housing policy in part to respond to such complaints.

Nevertheless, College administrators have also noted that the new policy is a proactive measure intended to effect the positive changes envisioned in the College's 10-year strategic plan.

According to Presbyterian College President John V. Griffith, the housing policy is actually unrelated to the issue of town-gown relations. Griffith noted that College officials had been discussing changes to the housing policy for months and that the College's announcement of the policy change unintentionally coincided with the events of the summer. Indeed, the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees adopted the new housing policy on June 29, nearly two weeks before local residents complained about student behavior at a July 12 City Council meeting.

"We first began discussing this idea in February," noted Griffith in the public relations office's press release. "This action was taken to support the Living/Learning priority of the strategic plan to enhance fiscal management, and to respond to concerns of the local community about student behavior in residential areas."

According to Griffith, on-campus living is an essential part of the PC experience. Griffith noted that, until the housing policy had been changed earlier in this decade, the College had always required students to live on campus, as Davidson

College, Centre College, and most other residential colleges continue to do. "Allowing all seniors to live off campus," Griffith said, "undermines the notion of a residential college."

Because PC is a residential college, we believe that living on campus provides essential opportunities for personal growth, development, and education," said Griffith. "Quite honestly, when students choose to live off campus during their junior or senior year, a significant element of their college experience is lost, and one of the key characteristics of a residential liberal arts college is eliminated."

Griffith said that the college is seeking to make on-campus living more attractive to students through renovation of the residence halls and improvements to campus food services (see stories on page 4 and 8) and that the College plans to construct more apartment-style residence halls in the future.

"PC has adopted a strategic plan that sets as a top priority for our work the strengthening of the quality of the living environment and the relationship between the academic and co-curricular programs," said Griffith. "This summer we began to focus on this priority by renovating three residence halls and developing new concepts for student dining, the canteen and the campus store. In the upcoming months, we will examine other ways to address this priority as we seek to affirm that the quality of life on campus is a central component of a liberal arts education."

Sodexo Marriott makes changes to Greenville Dining Hall

by Ben Acton
Managing Editor

The Blue Ladies are not all blue anymore. Many of the long time servers and preparers of food at Greenville Dining Hall or GDH have exchanged their traditional blue aprons for red ones, but dress was not the only change at GDH as the fall semester began.

A wider variety of foods, a detailed menu and new hours of operation are some of the changes to GDH as a result of Sodexo Marriott Services undertaking the operation of food services for PC. The relationship between PC and Sodexo Marriott officially began on August 1, 1999. According to Mr. Morris Galloway, PC's acting vice president for administration and finance, that with the approval of the college's 10-year strategic plan, the timing was right for PC to explore a relationship with a food service provider.

"We want our food services to be the best of any liberal arts college in the state and one of the best in the entire region," Galloway said. "We are starting from a great foundation, built over the years by Vernon Powell and the entire staff. Sodexo Marriott brings its strengths in customer focus and culinary arts to help us achieve our vision for the next ten years."

Sodexo Marriott Management, Inc. began operations as a company in 1998 with the merger of Marriott Management Services and Sodexo Alliance. The company handles approximately 850 accounts in higher education, including such colleges as Lander University, Converse College, and the University of South Carolina.

So far student reaction to the new changes has been positive.

"[The changes] are phenomenal," said sophomore John Catoe.

Added senior Bryan Riddle, "From where we were before, the situation is great, but there still need to be improvements."

One impending improvement is the renovation to Springs Campus Center grill. The renovations will bring in a Starbucks Coffee Shop, a Freshens Yogurt, a Sub Connection (similar to Subway) and Soloner Grill which will serve a variety of items such as hamburgers, chicken and barbecue. The projected date for completion is October First. Planned for the summer of 2000 is a major renovation to GDH. In addition, all of the workers for Springs and GDH are now employees of Sodexo Marriott.

In order to train and ensure a smooth transition period, Sodexo Marriott has assigned Aubrey Wooten to serve as on-site general manager during the fall semester.

"My job is to work closely with the staff and train them in the new policies [of Sodexo Marriott]," Wooten said. "I like all the associates that I'm working with here. The staff is like a sponge waiting to absorb the changes we're making. All of the people here are very capable. Everybody is eager and that is very refreshing."

Ray Bell, director of PC food services, agreed

"This staff is a great group, just super people," he said, adding that Sodexo Marriott's commitment to people rather than the bottom line has excited him. Terry Baughn, director of catering for food service, was also supportive of Sodexo Marriott.

Sodexo Marriott is a management system," said Baughn of his new employer. "They show us a better way of doing things and provide us the equipment and support we need."

Baughn added that he was very happy about the new changes in dining at PC.

A new commitment to revitalizing the food services at GDH and Springs has also brought with it a revitalized commitment to the students.

"In the end it's the students who really win out in this anyway," said Baughn. "Many of our students are used to seeing first class dining. That [kind of dining] is what we are now trying to provide, and I love working with the students."

Bell also touched on the commitment to students by the Blue Ladies.

"They have their favorite students," he said. "And they will fuss if those students come up in line and there's not a lot of food left. The students and this job is what, many of them really live for."

And with the improvements to GDH, the students now have something else to look forward to and to live for as well.

"I want to eat at GDH now," said sophomore Rachel Parsons. "The food is really a lot better."

Junior Beth Cook agreed adding that, with the improvements, "I'll be gaining some weight this year."

Students in midst of city's legal battle

and their lease over a year ago.

"It's not like we were trying to sneak around," said Dodd. "We didn't even know of the ordinance."

Dodd and Soileau said that their budget would be more of a strain than it is now if one of the four students were forced to find alternative housing. "Nevertheless, they said that money is not as important to them as the time that they spent working on the house and planning for their senior year. According to the students, the house was in terrible condition when they arrived this summer, and they invested a great deal of time in fixing the house."

The students also said that the controversy over the zoning ordinance has put a damper on their excitement about living off-campus.

"It's a shame. We've been so excited, and they're putting a damper on what we've wanted to do," said Soileau. "It's like losing the freedom that you thought you were going to have."

Indeed, many current seniors indicate that they have looked forward to off-campus living as the normal climax of their PC career. As statistics presented by the Office of Residence Life and the Dean of Students have shown, 83 to 93 percent of seniors over the past twenty years have lived off-campus. Such statistics may demonstrate that there exists among students an expectation that they will live off-campus during their senior year.

Nixon said that there is currently space available on campus to accommodate five additional female students and more space available to accommodate male students. Nevertheless, Nixon noted that the College had no spaces available on campus in July, when the City granted the six-month grace period to landlords. At the time, said Nixon, the College was even considering placing three students in certain rooms that had been designed to hold only two students, and the housing crisis was only solved when a number of accepted students chose not to attend in the fall.

But, although city officials have vowed to enforce the zoning ordinance in January, many local residents argue that January is not soon enough.

On Wednesday night of last week, homeowners met with Mayor Myra Nichols, Building Inspector Roland Tidwell, Police Chief Carroll Barker and City Manager Charles Litchfield to voice their grievances. The delegation demanded that city officials enforce the zoning ordinance immediately and asked why the city had granted landlords a six-month grace period in the first place.

"Why did the city even let students move in, knowing that they'd have to leave in December?" asked one local resident.

Litchfield defended the six-month grace period, arguing that students who had taken out leases on the property in April needed time to find alternative housing for the spring semester.

Barker assured local residents that the Clinton police will be vigilant in enforcing all state and local laws, and he said that he had met with police in Clemson to develop a plan for cracking down on student partying.

"We will enforce the laws, and you will be able to sleep at night," he said.

Barker added that the police will seek to work with students to ameliorate problems in the residential neighborhood around the College. According to Barker, Clinton police have distributed brochures that discuss state and local laws regarding alcohol and noise violations and that provide tips on keeping parties under control.

College administrators have expressed their commitment to working with local law-enforcement officers. In an August 10 statement to members of the PC community, President John V. Griffith noted that PC has a responsibility to uphold local, federal and state statutes and laws; and he noted that the majority of PC students living off-campus cause little or no problem for their neighbors. In addition, the College has sent a conduct policy statement to all PC students living off-campus and met earlier this week with local officials, landlords and off-campus students to discuss ordinances and laws pertaining to residents in the community.

According to Griffith, college administrators are currently working with landlords to develop a code of conduct for students living off-campus.

"We will continue our work with landlords who rent to our students with the objective of developing a code of conduct that clearly states the College's expectations for student conduct and that we will ask landlords to include in lease agreements," wrote Griffith in an August 19 letter to Litchfield. "This code will of necessity take into account the State of South Carolina's statute pertaining to the rights and privileges of tenants. It is our objective to have this code of conduct developed by the first of the year and in place as leases are signed this spring."

Griffith said that, as the College develops the code of conduct, the College's Judicial Council will have to ask themselves what sort of jurisdiction they have over students living off-campus.

New students learn the basics of life at PC

by Kay Owen
Production Editor

Wednesday, August 25, 1999, the Student Government Association and 66 Orientation Guides welcomed a new class of PC students to campus. That day a total of 350 new students settled in what will be their home for the next four months.

The theme for 1999 Orientation was "Welcome to the Jungle." In an effort to incorporate the theme into the programs, leaders decorated freshman dorms, Springs Campus Center and other parts of campus with bunnies and signs welcoming new students to PC. To keep the theme going, resident assistants wore camouflage shirts reading "It's a jungle out there, live and learn." Also, Student Volunteer Services decorated the front of Greenville Dining Hall with a bamboo archway to welcome students to the SVS luncheon the Friday of orientation.

This year's freshman class contains 339 students. In addition, 11 transfer students have joined the student body. This class is the third largest in PC history.

The student leaders helped new students move in and get acquainted with their new living spaces. After some meetings with administration and faculty advisers, new students ate a picnic, dinner and said goodbye to their parents. For the next five days, they would be totally immersed in the life at PC.

Thursday, freshmen took placement tests and got acquainted with the ROTC department and downtown Clinton. For the second year running, the Uptown Clinton Development Association and the PC Student Government Association joined together to sponsor the Downtown Block Party. The party was complete with food from local restaurants, a DJ, raffle prizes and dancing.

Friday, freshmen and transfers registered for classes, met with Multicultural Student Union and Student Volunteer Services and took tours of the Thomason Library. The evening culminated in the Satan/Joan Party in Springs Campus Center. The orientation guides encouraged all students to dress up for the occasion and to enjoy a DJ and plenty of dancing.

Saturday held the annual field day activities and the usual bombardment of shaving cream on the unsuspecting freshmen. Saturday was also the day of the Honor Roll dinner and signing followed by the President's reception in his home.

Sunday was the final day of orientation. Events included the traditional chapel service, SVS skit and fame video of the orientation week. That night, the college invited freshmen and the rest of campus to attend a faculty versus staff softball game on the intramural field and to enjoy a picnic sponsored by GDH.

Some aspects of Orientation were different in 1999. For starters, the terms Freshman Orientation Board and Transfer Orientation Board were dropped in favor of simply Orientation. The use of FOB and TOB was a hold-over of days past when a board of students apparently answered questions from concerned new students. Similarly the terms FOB and TOB leaders were exchanged for OG's or Orientation Guides.

Residence halls improved this summer

by Mindy Powers
News/Campus Life Editor

You may have noticed changes to your dorm room when you arrived back on campus this week. The residence life staff, along with other administrators, has been busy all summer preparing the dorms for the students' return. Many improvements have been made in order to make residential life at Presbyterian College more enjoyable.

Several residence halls have received major facelifts this summer. Clinton, Belk and Georgia Halls all received new carpet, furniture and other decorations in their lobbies. In addition, the kitchens have been refurbished in Clinton and Belk Halls. Georgia residents will also enjoy new lighting in their rooms. The common areas in these three halls have been repainted and each received new wooden bunk beds of adjustable height and new adjustable chairs.

Mike Rosilino, the director of residence life expressed excitement about the new changes.

"The lobbies feel much more like home," he said. "We've also added a lot more comfortable study spaces in the residence halls. The new furniture is top of the line and will give students a lot of flexibility in how they set up their rooms."

The only downside of these new improvements was the new rule that prohibits lofts in these residence halls. Many students purchased lofts last spring unaware that new furniture and new restrictions would remove the option of using these lofts. These students have been advised to attempt to sell their lofts to students living in Bailey Hall.

In addition to the new look that Clinton, Belk and Georgia dorms have received, the entire campus has been wired to the residential computer network called RESNET. This network will allow students with personal computers to access the Internet from the comfort of their dorms rooms without tying up their phone line.

These improvements are just the first step in the plan to create a more positive experience for students living on campus.

"From these improvements in the residence halls and wiring the individual dorm rooms for Internet access to exciting new changes in our food services and bookstore operations, we want our students to enjoy a rich, rewarding 'living and learning' experience at PC," said Dr. John V. Griffith, president of Presbyterian College.

Blue Hose football season opener tomorrow vs. West Georgia State

by Doodle Harris
Content Editor

Find those kilts and memorize the fight song for the start of Presbyterian College's football season.

Tomorrow, Blue Hose fans once again fill Bailey Memorial Stadium as restless players gather for PC football's opener against the West Georgia State Braves.

This inauguration of the 1999 season could positively affect PC's rankings in the Southern Region NCAA Division II polls. Prior to any kickoffs, West Georgia State is placed at #4 with the Blue Hose close behind at #8. PC also begins the season ranked #2 in SAC play trailing Carson-Newman College.

Following the scrimmages of the previous weeks, head coach Daryl Dickey was pleased with the team's performance.

"The team as a whole still has some progress to make, but I am very enthusiastic about the prospect of our season," said Dickey.

Leading the team this year are twelve returning starters, including two All-Americans and seven players named to the All-South Atlantic Conference Pre-season Football Team.

Calling the plays is All-American Todd Cunningham, a sophomore from Irmo, S.C. who broke the Blue Hose passing yardage record for a single season after playing only seven of last year's eleven games. Had Cunningham been eligible for NCAA Division starts (which he missed by one game), he would have led the SAC in total passing yards, completed passes and touchdown passes.

The other returning All-American is Travis Smith, a junior wide receiver from Dublin, Ga. Last season, he led the SAC in receiving yards (1099), touchdowns (16) and average yards per game (99.9).

The rest of the All-SAC selections from PC include senior wide receiver Brad Bolemon of Danielsville, Ga.; senior offensive lineman Rod Hammond of Elgin, S.C.; sophomore offensive tackle Chris Digby of Summerville, S.C.; and senior punter Jeremy Joyner of Lyons, Ga. Senior linebacker Todd Huffman of Jacksonville, Fla. is PC's sole representative on the defensive side of the line.

Additionally, forty-seven freshmen will wear Blue Hose jerseys for the first time.

According to Dickey, "This year's freshman class has a tremendous potential ahead of them and we are looking forward to their contributions for years to come."

THE BLUE STOCKING

THE BLUE STOCKING

Men's Soccer picked to win Conference title

by Zach Braden
Sports Writer

The Presbyterian men's soccer team hopes to retain their preseason number one ranking throughout the upcoming season. This preseason poll places PC ahead of Wingate (second) and Catawba (third). After finishing a disappointing fourth place last season in the SAC, Coach Ralph Polson considers this season a test for his team.

After coming off two mediocre seasons, it is an honor to be ranked first in the conference," said Polson. "However, there is an obvious pressure to be successful this year."

Polson is headed into his eighteenth year as head coach of the men's soccer team.

In addition, according to senior Rocky Dimsore, the team has developed a new style of play under the direction of Pete Peterson, who assisted Coach Polson during the pre-season.

He relates to players really well, which is half the coaching job," said Dimsore. "We wish he could stay, but he's gotta go."

The number one goal this year for the team is to finish first in the conference. If they achieve this they will aspire to get a bid into the NCAA Division II Championship. Another one of the team's goals is to "have fun." That should be fairly easy if they play up to their expectations.

"I feel like we've got a great team," said Dimsore. "We've been picked to win the Conference... we've just got to do it."

Polson admits that it is time for his team "to step up and show everyone that they deserve to be ranked number one." Following a promising preseason, Polson has noticed a dramatic increase in enthusiasm and a new found team unity.

The team has many outstanding players returning to the field for the 1999 season. The starting goalkeeper at this moment is sophomore Andy Pfaffl. However, he is being strongly contended by senior Phil Thomas, junior Matt Miletich, and sophomore Anthony Pearson. Pearson has joined the team as a transfer from Piedmont College, where he earned All-Conference status.

The defense witnesses the return of three seniors who have proven their talent through their careers here at PC. Brian Grunta returns after red shirting last year. Daniel Hanks returns also after red shirting last year due to a knee injury. Hanks was an All-Conference winner for his efforts in the 1997 season. The two-time All-Conference winner Ryan Comer also returns to the back for his senior year.

The return of senior Dimsore and juniors Walter Howard, Warren Turner, and Andy Evans promises that the midfield will be strong. Dimsore is an experienced midfielder with the All-Conference title. Howard is also a dominant force in the middle. Junior Jamil Ficklin also remains in the middle. The midfield welcomes freshman Tommy Wollenberger and Kyle Coker to the ranks. The unfortunate injury to junior Gus Gooding was a dramatic blow to the midfield, but the freshmen are confident they can fill the hole.

The front runners also witness a strong return of solid performers. All-Conference member Drew Stephens returns for his senior year hoping to make an ever bigger impact than in his previous years. Sophomore Jeff Hendrix returns from a promising freshman year where he earned Freshman of the Year. Freshman Sean Warren is expected to make an immediate impact to the Hose's attack.

If you would like to catch the number one ranked team in the South Atlantic Conference in action, they are participating in the Nike Kick-Off Classic this weekend. The games are to be held here on the PC campus on the Pondo. Saturday, PC will take on Concord College at 4:00. Morehouse College will come to town on Sunday to take on the Hose; this match is also at 4:00.

Purcell, Lady Blue Hose aim high for 1999 season

by Amy Kukla
Sports Writer

With the fall season just around the corner, the Lady Blue Hose soccer team has been pushing themselves to their limits during the preseason to prepare for yet another strong season. Under the coaching of Brian Purcell, the team has captured five SAC regular season championships in the past seven years. Last year, the team came out on top again in the Conference. Just recently, the votes came in from the South Atlantic Conference preseason coaches poll, and PC was voted to finish a respectable second, coming in only behind rival Catawba. However, Coach Purcell aims a little higher than second this season.

"I feel very optimistic about the upcoming season," said Coach Purcell. "We have five new freshmen who should add a tremendous amount to this team's already solid core of upperclassmen. Our six seniors are consistent and are all strong players. They are excellent leaders on and off of the field."

The team has already played in two scrimmages so far this year in order to prepare them for the regular fall season. The first scrimmage, on Sat. Aug. 28, was against a club team out of Stone Mountain, Ga. which PC slaughtered 4-1. The following day, Sun. Aug. 29, the Blue Hose were on the road again to face Emory College in Decatur, Ga. After a tremendous game for both teams, Emory came out on top with a score of 2-1. PC put up a strong fight, with a goal in the second half by forward Karen Markham, a senior.

"We played well against Emory," said freshman Jessi Adair, a forward from Decatur, Ga. "All of our hard preseason work showed in the level of our play, but we just made a few mistakes that cost us goals. I feel like we play well as a team because the team has such a special bond. They really made the rest of the freshmen and I feel at home."

The season is not going to be an easy one by any means. The season opener is on Sept. 4 at Belmont Abbey College in Belmont, N.C. where the Belmont Abbey Invitational kicks off the fall season. After four games this weekend, the remainder of the season follows a similar pace, with 20 games between now and November 7. Among these teams are three teams in the top 25 and Catawba, ranked number one in the Conference in the preseason polls. But with seven starters, 16 letterwinners and six seniors returning, the whole team, rookies and veterans alike, is looking forward to a fast-paced and successful fall season.

"The whole team is full of energy and ready to begin the season," said senior captain Anne Marie Flaherty. "I think we should definitely be able to compete strongly at the Conference and Regional levels. We have a great amount of depth this year and I think our talent will show in our games. I think we are definitely ready to play the soccer we've been training for."

SGA task force examines College budget policies: Student Government seeks to give students more power of the purse

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

A task force composed of students, faculty and administrators met Tuesday to examine the budgets of student organizations and to consider possible ways to enact changes to current budget policies.

The SGA, with direction from the officers and directors of the College, appointed the task force to develop a new plan and procedure for the allocation of student funds that will give students greater power of the purse.

"The purpose and goals of this task force will examine issues that are deep-rooted troubles of not only the Student Government, but also the student organizations on campus," said Jay Philpott, SGA president.

According to Philpott, PC students are unable to carry out many of their ideas for student activities because they are hindered by an inefficient budgeting procedure.

"When students visit other small private schools, they marvel at the large events and large bands which are hosted there," said Philpott. "One of the reasons that Presbyterian and its student organizations cannot host these 'brand name' or large events is because students are not deciding where student money is spent or allocated. The Student Government feels that if the students' elected leaders decided where money is allocated, then funding larger events would be possible."

Philpott said that winning greater student control over organizational budgets is the SGA's main goal this year, and he figuratively described the budget issue as a "key hole issue."

"Imagine that you're looking into a room through a tiny key hole in the door," he said. "If you can only get the key in, then you can get into the 'room' and solve so many other problems."

According to Philpott, the SGA goal consists of two parts.

First, the SGA wants the College to allocate money to student organizations on a per-student basis. Currently, the sizes of organizational budgets are independent of the number of students enrolled at PC. According to Philpott, the Student Union Board (SUB) received less funding this year than it did last year, even though enrollment has increased since last year.

"We feel a study would show that, if money were allocated on a per-student basis, then more activities could be offered," said Philpott at a meeting last month with the directors and officers of the College. "Were enrollment to go up, organizations could provide more programs equal to the increase in the school population. Were enrollment numbers to decline, student organizations would have less funding and would thus provide fewer programs."

Second, the SGA wants to enact certain regulations that student organizations must follow to remain recognized by the College. Currently, student organizations

POINT

Despite concerns, two thumbs up to SGA for proposed changes to budgeting policies

Student leaders are urging College administrators to make some fundamental changes to the way student funds are allocated; and though we at the Blue Stocking have mixed reactions to the SGA's ideas, as a whole we applaud the SGA for their efforts to give students more control over student funds.

The task force that is currently reviewing the College's budgeting policies has not yet presented an official report. Since we don't want to prejudice the issue, we are not yet able to offer a complete position on the SGA's proposed changes. At the moment, we have a number of questions about how the Blue Stocking and other organizations will be specifically affected by any change in budget policies. In particular, some of us wonder about what kind of relationship the student government should have with the student press, which is funded, in part, by student activity funds.

Nevertheless, we understand that such questions can only be answered when the task force presents its report; and despite our questions and concerns about possible changes to the budget policies, we cannot help feeling excited about the idea of students holding greater control over where their money is spent. For the mean time, we at the Blue Stocking are optimistic that the SGA-appointed task force will consider the interests and views of all in the PC community, and we urge the task force to develop a plan that reflects those varied needs and interests.

PC Cinema selections do not reflect campus diversity

The events which occurred during the month of December, 1998, led to many discussions about diversity on the campus of Presbyterian College. Yet, there has been little action coming from these discussions. Since December, the College has been preaching diversity as if it was the fire and brimstone sermon right before the rapture.

As a student here, I have a legitimate concern about this situation. It seems like minorities are left out when it comes to campus activities. Though minorities make up a small percentage here on campus, when it comes to numbers, we are here. We do need to be recognized and represented on this campus. In the wake of the events that occurred in the month of December, the role of the College should be to bridge the gap between different groups, but I must say I have only seen a few attempts to do this. Out of the few attempts, none of them have been supported by all the organizations on campus. To be honest, there has been very little interaction by organizations other than MSU and the newly formed Project Understanding. To me, this is a serious problem. I have had conversations with many leaders of campus organizations. One of those campus organizations was with the leader of SGA. It was an informal conversation, yet it meant the most to me. The conversation was about the movies being shown in the PC Cinema. The movies that have been shown to date have had only three leading parts played by minority actors. Out of the eight movies scheduled to be shown during the fall semester, there are only two minorities playing lead roles. To make the matter worse, the two minorities are in the same movie, "The Wild Wild West." This movie is to be played on October 8, the last day of Diversity

Week. This decision makes people think that the movie is only being played to say the organization participated in the event. Would the movie even be shown if it wasn't for that reason? It makes you wonder. How is it that movies that have minority leading parts can be shown on the PC Channel, but they cannot be headlines for PC Cinema? There is something wrong with this picture. Minorities are the top moviegoers in the nation, especially African Americans, yet there are almost no movies being shown to cater to this audience. Is the College saying this audience isn't important enough to be concerned with? Is the College saying the quality of movies with minority leads are inferior to the ones with white leads? What is the College saying? Please answer this question. I am not saying the movies selected aren't good ones, but there were other good movies left out. In fact, I would view all the movies selected. I would like to see more diversity in the selection of these movies.

To end this letter of concern, I would like to say this would not be a problem if diversity wasn't being preached in PC. Diversity is more than words; there must be actions to go along with those words. The problems cannot be pushed back to be dealt with next semester or even next year. This is a growing problem, and if it is not solved now, it will explode. It has been said that if you don't learn from the past, you are bound to repeat it. If Presbyterian College does not learn from its not-so-distant past, it is up to the challenge of dealing with its not-so-bright future.

Sincerely,
Jackie Pearson

While riding to the grocery store the other day I saw numerous signs that said, "Welcome Back PC Students." Unfortunately, for those of us who keep up with the newspapers, PC students are not as welcome in the neighborhoods surrounding the College as they are in local businesses. Why are we welcome in local churches and in local businesses but not in the neighborhoods? The answer has many sides.

Rental property, in many areas, causes property values to fall. Homes are investments and local residents are justifiably concerned about rental property surrounding their homes. Many off-campus students have cars. When everyone in a rental property parks on the street, we take away parking from other homes. Organizational meetings and studying keep students up later than other Clinton residents. The stress of academics, athletics and other areas of college life often causes students to "kick up their feet" at times.

These observations, when they are real actions, upset some Clinton residents and might explain why we are welcome at local churches and businesses but not in the neighborhoods. Many students are upset about the newspapers and other discussions about our residency in local areas.

What is the proper response? Some have suggested a boycott of local businesses. I do not feel that this is a good idea because local businesses have not done anything wrong. In addition, a boycott could undermine Presbyterian's efforts to attract more businesses to the area. I feel that instead of boycotting we should continue to request answers to our concerns and questions. Instead of every different interest group attacking each other through the media, I feel that we, as students, should be the leaders and rise above attacks and do something positive. Over the next several months, let's find a way to assure that our rights are not disregarded while still finding a way to be a positive force off-campus and on.

Griffith: "McWorld or Global Village?"

Presbyterian College President John Griffith issued a challenge last week to the students, faculty, staff and patrons of the institution to look beyond their privileged world to the reality of today's global village.

His remarks came during PC's Opening Convocation, which he addressed the official beginning of the 1999-2000 academic year.

Griffith said people today must decide to accept one of two competing versions of reality. The first he called "McWorld," calling it a common misperception of a world dominated by technology and capitalism. Because most Americans are comfortable and prosperous, he said, they tend to believe that everyone shares similar circumstances.

Describing a more accurate "global village," Griffith related some interesting, yet troubling statistics in which 70 percent of the world's population are unable to read and 50 percent suffer from malnutrition. Only one percent has a college education, and six percent of the population possess 60 percent of the world's wealth.

He pointed out that, by global standards, everyone in the Belk Auditorium audience was among the privileged six percent of the world.

"I possess the resources and power that permit me more than anyone else to have control over my destiny and that of my fellow man," he said, adding that Christians must avoid making their faith a parochial, even an exclusive concept, by failing to acknowledge those who do not share the same religious beliefs.

"On the other hand, those who opt for the universal settle in with an accommodating folk religion, which avoids the challenge of Christian witness," he said.

"If this is the stance we are willing to take as Christians, we will not tolerate anything that sets us apart, over and against the world. It will not be sufficient for us to know the global village solely through the lenses of 'McWorld.' Rather, we will be a community that is eager to know, to engage, to learn from, to understand those with whom we live."

Philpott, Student Government Association push for changes to College budgeting policies must follow a detailed procedure outlined in the "Knapsack" in order to be granted a charter by the College. However, according to Philpott, there is currently no procedure for revoking an organization's charter. Thus, even if an organization's aims were to depart from the aims of the College, such an organization would remain recognized by the College.

Philpott said that this second part of the SGA goal is an important part of the SGA's overall aim, since it would make organizations accountable to student leaders for the ways that they spend student funds and would provide student leaders with justification for cutting the budgets of some organizations.

Philpott recommended that an organizational contract be developed for this purpose.

"Organizations and their leaders would have to be accountable to continue to be recognized," he said. "The contract will have certain requirements. Were these requirements not met, then the organizational mailbox, meeting space or other privileges would be taken away, or the organization would need to re-apply for recognition the following academic year. The Student Government, as well as certain members of the faculty and administration, would review the organizational contract every year, as well as their aims, contributions to campus and use of their budget."

The task force's first job is to research the ways that other colleges allocate funds for student organizations. Philpott recommended that students and administrators consider a model developed by the University of Chicago's student government. At Chicago, a finance committee overseen by the University Student Government Assembly allocates a total of $171,000 in student funds to recognized student organizations. In order to be granted student funds, campus organizations at Chicago must request such funds through a formal application process. Philpott suggested that, even though the University of Chicago is much larger than PC, Chicago's method of allocating student funds may work well at Presbyterian.

After gathering enough information about budgeting practices at other colleges and universities, the task force will seek to draft a plan for future budget procedures and policies. The task force expects to present its plan to the Student Government by the time the College begins its budgeting process in early October. In order to meet that deadline, said Philpott, students will have to work closely with both faculty and administration in the next month.

According to Philpott, developing a plan that takes into account the interests of all in the PC community will be a difficult task. Indeed, the appropriate authorities must pass any proposed budget plan before it is sent for consideration to the next level. If the Student Government Association proposes the plan, then the Student Affairs Committee, the College faculty, the president of the College and, finally, the Board of Trustees must all approve it before the College adopts it. For this reason, said Philpott, student leaders are seeking to involve a number of different people in the discussion process, and students, faculty and administration are all represented on the task force.

Dr. Peter Hobbie, associate professor of religion and a member of the task force, said that he supports giving students a greater say in how funds are allocated.

"The key issue is that students should have more control over where their funds go," said Hobbie. "My hope would be that there is some sort of committee that oversees it. I hope that it will make organizations a little more honest in how they spend their money."

PC IN BRIEF

Campus master planning sessions continue today

Consultants from the Watson-Tate Architects firm of Columbia, S.C., and Sasaki Associates Inc. of Boston, Mass., arrived on campus yesterday to discuss the future physical development of the PC campus in the next decade with members of the College and local community. Their presentation is part of the College's master planning process, which developed from the College's strategic planning process last year.

According to College administrators, the campus master plan, when complete, will outline how the College plans to use existing structures and how it plans to expand the campus through the construction of new facilities in the next decade.

Consultants yesterday offered a number of scenarios for review in sessions with administrators, staff, faculty, students and members of the local community. Members of the College community and the City of Clinton were encouraged to react to the ideas of the consultants. Discussion continues today at the Mabry-Smith-Yonce center through sessions with local residents at 8:30 a.m. and with students at 10:00 a.m.

The details of the consultants' meetings yesterday were unavailable at press. Look for a more complete overview of the master planning process in the next issue of the "Blue Stocking."

—from staff reports

Hobbie noted that generation of funds is an important issue tied to the allocation of funds.

"I hope that, if students have responsibility over where money is spent, then they'll care about where the money is coming from."

Hobbie agreed with Philpott that student fees should correlate to the size of the student population and that such fees should be used only for student activities, rather than for general purposes.

Morris Galloway, acting vice president of finance, noted that the general fees paid by students are not tightly linked with student activities in that there is no one-to-one correlation between the general fees and student activities. Galloway said that he is not opposed to the idea of instituting a student activities fee that would be used specifically for student social and extracurricular events, should student leaders propose such a fee.

Galloway said that he does not want to prejudge the issue before the details have been spelled out.

"I'm looking for better communication and coordination among student groups," said Galloway.

Like Galloway, Philpott noted that cooperation is the key to developing a solution that will benefit all.

"We want to act as 'bridge builders,' not building a bridge for ourselves, but for all those that follow," said Philpott. "We know that we will only benefit from being part of this group effort. However, we know our legacy will make an incredible and worthwhile change for the quality of student life which we represent on this campus."

PC alumnus to entertain at Homecoming festivities

by Tara Sluder
Staff Writer

As homecoming approaches, SUB, alumni affairs and many others are busy preparing for what looks to be a fun and exciting weekend. Alumni will join students, faculty, staff and the Clinton community to celebrate the heritage of PC and to cheer the Blue Hose on to victory against Carson-Newman.

Among the many events planned for the weekend is a concert featuring Robin & Linda Williams and Their Fine Group. Robin, a 1969 graduate of PC, will not only be returning to PC to perform, but also to attend his 30th class reunion. During the annual Homecoming awards program, Williams will receive the Alumni Gold P Award, an honor presented annually recognizing a distinguished career.

"Robin is the 1999 recipient of the Alumni Gold P Award, which is the highest honor that the alumni association bestows," said Mary Lehman, administrative assistant of alumni affairs. "It is presented to an alumnus who has brought credit to his career and this school."

Alumni officials have made attempts in the past years to schedule a homecoming performance by the Williamses and their band, but the group keeps a busy agenda. This year, however, alumni officials have succeeded in booking a performance by the talented and successful band.

Since 1975, Williams and his wife, Linda, have appeared regularly on Garrison Keillor's Saturday night radio show, "A Prairie Home Companion." The popular acoustic duo have also made numerous appearances on the Grand Ole Opry, "The American Radio Company," "Mountain Stage" and television's "Austin City Limits."

Covering such genres as folk, bluegrass and country, Robin and Linda Williams have thrilled audiences for over 25 years. Accomplished musicians including Mary-Chapin Carpenter, Emmylou Harris and Kathy Mattea have recorded songs written by the Williamses. In January 1998, Robin & Linda Williams and Their Fine Group released an album entitled "Devil of a Dream." The album is Robin and Linda's fourteenth.

Jim Watson and Kevin Maul joined the Williamses in the early nineties as "Their Fine Group." The band features Watson, the founding member of The Red Clay Ramblers, on bass and vocals and Maul on dobro and vocals.

The concert will begin at 8:30 p.m. on Saturday, September 18, in Edmunds Hall. Tickets cost $10 in advance and $15 at the door. Students, alumni and community members alike are welcome at the performance, which should be worth while and entertaining.

"We're hoping that many students as well as alumni will come to the concert," said Lehman. "They will really enjoy the show. The Williamses have been performing for over 20 years."

Don't miss Robin and Linda and Their Fine Group on Saturday night. These fine musicians may not be able to make it back to Clinton for a while.

"Robin was a wonderfully gifted guitar player and singer while he was here at PC," said Ken Terrell, class of 1968. "He and his wife have since teamed up to entertain people all over the nation with their own brand of folk singing."

Pep band to make more appearances

by Doodle Harris

Once again Saturday approaches at Presbyterian College. At noon the tornado siren wails announcing a day for football. Slaps of pads can be heard from the football stadium during warm-ups before the game. Somewhat surprisingly, a tuning note for a band also reverberates throughout the stands. But why is there a tuning note for the traditional "piped-in" bagpipe rendition of "Scotland the Brave?"

For the first season in a number of years, the Presbyterian College Blue Thunder Pep Band once again accompanies the football team's efforts at home games. Adorned in their finest matching garnet and blue, the twenty-or-so piece ensemble, consisting of representatives from each academic class, sits in the upper regions section A.

"It seems as if music takes an important place at many team sporting events in North America," said band director and founder Dr. Orval Oleson, chairman of the department of music. "For many years, exposure to several styles of music probably is most in the area of 'useful' music, and music to accompany sporting events is a primary example. The music can do much to promote team and crowd unity, and get both athletes and the crowd into a jubilant spirit."

In addition to several repetitions of the PC fight song, the band also features such favorites as "YMCA," "In the Mood" and "Splish Splash." Debuting at tomorrow's game is the gothic favorite of the trombone section, the theme from "Batman."

Helping Dr. Oleson in directing and organizing is Mr. Ron Fillel, brass professor at PC. For the directors and the students, giving up their Tuesday and Thursday nights to practice and their Saturdays to perform has not been a terrible chore.

"I think that the pleasure of playing the music, especially as part of a group such as this, has the most to do with it," said Dr. Oleson. "We try to have fun, while we work to play and perform the music better and better. Our PC students will always find the time to do those things that are worthwhile and are good for the campus community and for themselves."

"I'm so excited to get the opportunity to play at the football games," said David Howell, senior trumpet player. "Music definitely intensifies the level of excitement. Since so many students come to the games in ties or dresses and hardly clap, this is our way of cheering on the Blue Hose."

PC students not in the pep band also share enthusiasm for the musical addition.

"The music adds spirit to the game," said Wendy Seymour, sophomore.

"Saturday's game was filled with emotion because it was so close," said Sophomore Susan Freeman, referring to PC's narrow 40-41 win over the West Georgia Braves. "The pep band added to the drama."

"I definitely am all about the band," said Terry Heflrey, freshman. "We need people to get the spirit moving. Pep Band is just the thing to do this. Music Rocks."

"Having a college pep organization just goes with the rest of our instrumental music program like peanut butter and jelly," said Dr. Oleson. "Besides, I really do feel that we in the pep band have a good time. We enjoy the music and unity and laugh a lot."

Shands makes her mark with students, faculty

"I'm all that and a bag of chips," said Cynthia Shands. This issue's Senior Spotlight is not afraid to share exactly what is on her mind or tell anyone just the way things are. "I'm going to check out everybody."

From Pacolet, S.C., Cynthia is a chemistry major. After she graduates, she plans on attending bio-medical school.

"It's like a grad school where you don't have to take the MCAT," she said.

She is interested in medicine, but prefers to pursue other routes than a vocation as a medical doctor. Currently atop her profession choice is getting a PhD in pathology.

Cynthia's advice to every PC student is to "get involved, stay focused and don't worry too much." She has certainly embodied her philosophy. She is an active member of the alumni council, the Pacolet staff, the SGA, the fellowship choir, and she is involved with Project Understanding. She has also recently added the duties of a Resident Computer Consultant to her busy schedule.

Perhaps the activity for which Cynthia is most proud is her involvement with MSU. Serving as president gives Cynthia goals for the organization.

"She wants MSU to have a positive impact on campus," said Hill. "She wants PC to know that MSU is not 'off limits'—everyone is welcome. 'Cynt' has energy difficult person in the world to talk to because you can't get a word in edge-wise," said Dr. Ed Gouge, professor of chemistry. "On a serious side, she is very compassionate and family oriented. Under very adverse conditions she's maintained incredible composure. She always leaves a conversation in a good spirit. She makes people feel good. She could almost be a comedian."

Junior Amy Cooper agrees that the Oxford trip was not only a learning experience for Cynthia, but a chance for her to learn about Cynthia as well.

"I am a fast walker," Cooper said, "but Cynthia is the fastest walker in the world."

Cynthia describes herself as outgoing, spunky, modest, caring and nosey. For her fifteen minutes of fame she wishes to be known for "my beautiful face." She also enjoys "socializing on the weekends and tantalizing drunk people."

"Cynthia is caring and open in her own way," said Hill. "She will say and do just about anything. That is the one thing that makes her a joy to be around. She has a fresh approach to life and understands that the little things are what really counts."

an opportunity to work with a fun group of people and to air her opinions on the importance of diversity.

"It's important to get a lot of people involved," she said. "In MSU everyone can get involved, unlike in fraternities and sororities."

Shelia Hill, advisor of MSU, agrees that Cynthia has some great ideas and and creativity dripping from every fiber of her being."

Cynthia said the most challenging thing she has ever done is majoring in Chemistry, and the best learning experience she has received while at PC was the department's trip to Oxford, England, this past summer.

"Figs and Thistles" encourages student creativity, expression

by Mindy Powers
News/Campus Life
Editor

"Figs and Thistles", the literary magazine of Presbyterian College, is an outlet for students to express themselves with the written word, photography and artwork. The editors of "Figs and Thistles", Jay Howell and Cliff McKinney, are enthusiastic about changes to the magazine. They also hope to provide other ways for students at PC to show their creative side.

The changes in "Figs and Thistles" will focus on the participation of the entire student body.

"We are trying to take away the elitist stereotype of writers," said Howell. "We hope to reach out and encompass the entire student body with this year's magazine."

"Figs and Thistles" seeks to support the creative writing program at PC. However, submissions are welcome not only from English majors, but from all students. In addition, faculty and staff can submit their work to the magazine. The editors are encouraging submissions of the written word but will continue to accept submissions in other forms.

"Figs and Thistles" will co-sponsor several late night poetry and short fiction workshops in conjunction with Nancy McCabe of the English Department. These workshops will allow students to receive constructive criticism about their writing. The goal of the workshops is to encourage more submissions to "Figs and Thistles."

"Many students do not realize that the poetry and short fiction published in 'Figs and Thistles' is revised over and over," said McKinney. "They are hesitant about submitting material because their work may not seem as polished as the works that appear in the magazine. We hope that these workshops will give students an opportunity to bring the raw material they write at home to a group of well trained writers who can give constructive criticism."

Students who are interested in joining the staff of "Figs and Thistles" should contact Jay Howell or Cliff McKinney.

"Anyone with an interest in publishing or writing is encouraged to join," said McKinney. "We are looking forward to a good year with exciting improvements."

Submissions to the literary magazine are accepted throughout the academic year.

Volleyball team defeats Anderson College

The Presbyterian College Volleyball team started out the 1999 season strong with a 6-1 record. PC beat Anderson College three games to one in a non-conference match on September 11, 1999 in Anderson at the Abney Athletic Center. Sophomore Aisha Walker got eleven kills in the four game series. Sophomore Rikki Owens accumulated eight aces to lead the Blue Hose to victory.

Anderson College posed strong competition in all four games. The first game was tied four times, the last time at nine, before PC scored the final six points. PC defeated Anderson in the second game by scoring thirteen of the final fourteen points. Anderson College beat Presbyterian in the third game with an early strong lead. In the final game, PC came back strong with an 8-0 lead. Anderson College's final effort in the match was a rally, but the Blue Hose beat it back to close out the match.

The final scores for the match was 15-9, 15-10, 2-15, 15-10.

Cross Country team hoping to have home field advantage

by Hank Coleman
Staff Writer

Although they are the only PC sport without a home field advantage, the Blue Hose Cross Country Team takes the obstacle in stride.

"We hope to improve on last year's 6th and 7th place finishes in the conference for the guys and girls respectively," said second year head coach, Leigh Irwin.

In fact, PC has just put the finishing touches on their own running course that stretches from behind the softball and baseball fields and then through the nature trail.

"There are no meets this year because the schedule was already made before our course was completed, but we hope to have a couple of meets here on campus next year," said Coach Irwin.

The men's team includes returners Zach Braden, Dan Lancaster, Brandon Roshto and Johnathan Todd.

New this year are Matt Braswell, Brian James and Josh Terrell. Zach Braden finished 7th overall in the conference last season. The women's team welcomes back Heather Sherer, Amy Kukla and Kate Reissner. Additions to the team are Alison Oulz, Jennifer Stansell, Caroline Norman, Courtney Greene and Sarah Wells.

This past Saturday marked the opening of the Cross Country Team season. The team kicked off the year with a meet at Catawba College in Salisbury, NC. The men's team finished 9th in the race of fifteen teams, and the women's team finished 5th out of fifteen teams. Zach Braden had the best finish of the team placing eighth in the eight kilometer race with a time of 28 minutes and 12 seconds. Alison Oulz led the Lady Hose with a twelfth place finishing time of 20 minutes and 54 seconds for the five kilometer race. With many meets still left to run, there is a great opportunity for the team to do very even better.

At 3-0, the Blue Hose face No. 1 Carson-Newman

by Doodle Harris
Content Editor

Defeating the Carson-Newman Eagles tomorrow would not only make for an exciting Homecoming Game but also raise PC's record to a perfect 3-0. However, winning may not prove to be an easy task. Currently Carson-Newman is no. 1 in USA Football ratings and also brags of a perfect record. PC was 10-10. Beginning at three o'clock tomorrow, one team will remain unbeaten and the other robbed of perfection.

The Blue Hose's displays in previous games show that they have what it takes to win. In the season opener, PC defeated the favored West Georgia Braves in a highly emotional game. On the first snap of the game, sophomore Todd Cunningham threw a lateral pass to senior wideout Brad Boleman who then connected with sophomore Keyre Smith for an 86 yard run to the goal line. Still in the first quarter the Braves matched PC's display of offense with a touchdown of their own. However, before half time PC had scored an additional 28 unanswered points leaving a 35-7 score at the half. Also scoring for the Hose was Cunningham, junior quarterback, Blake Wilkey, and junior wide receiver Travis Smith.

The second half was not as fruitful for PC, because West Georgia's defense came alive. PC scored only one touchdown with another Cunningham-Bolenman pass. After watching the Braves score four more times, the game was determined by whose extra-point kicker was the best. PC came out on top thanks to the efforts of kicker, John Redding. The real hero of the game, however, was sophomore Tyson Summer, who blocked the Eagles final extra-point attempt, allowing the Blue Hose to retain a one point lead.

Last Saturday was PC's first NCAA Division II game against the Charleston Southern University Buccaneers in Charleston. PC won that game under the direction of Cunningham who passed for 216 yards and Travis Smith who converted two of the passes into touchdowns.

PC's defense held the Buccaneers scoreless until the third quarter while the offense scored 33 unanswered points. In the third, CSU found the endzone twice, narrowing the score to 33-14. However, in the fourth quarter, CSU's quarterback fumbled the ball, which PC's Jerome Bryant recovered and returned for a touchdown, setting the final score at 40-14.

PC's overall performances in its first two games pleased head coach, Daryl Dickey. But Dickey also expressed frustration that in the first two games of the season, his team has been outscored 48-21 in the second halves.

"Our defense did well, especially in the first half," said Dickey of last week's game. "But we can't afford to keep letting teams make a second half run at us."

Maybe this Homecoming weekend, PC's fans and students will make the effort to hang around for second half instead of leaving the student sections empty and the Blue Hose without half of their biggest supporters. Beating Carson-Newman could launch PC higher in the top ten of the NCAA Division II rankings and prove a sweet victory for PC alumni.

Men's Soccer: Blue Hose move up to No. 14 in nation

by Mindy Powers
Campus Life/News Editor

On the strength of a 4-0-0 record, PC's men's soccer team moved up to no. 14 in the latest NSCAA/Addidas NCAA Division II national rankings.

The team began the season with several strong wins over conference and non conference teams. They are striving toward their goal of finishing the season as the number one team in the South Atlantic Conference.

In its latest game, the Blue Hose beat SAC newcomer Tusculum College on September 11th. Only thirty-two shots were taken in the game, and only one found its way into the goal. Senior Brian Grunta, co-captain of the Blue Hose, was voted SAC player of the week after he found a loose ball in the box in the eighty-fourth minute of the game and scored. Junior goalkeeper Andy Pfaff got six saves in the game. The Blue Hose continued their winning streak by beating Erskine College in Due West, South Carolina, on September 13th. The final score was 2-0.

The men's soccer team will travel to Tampa, Florida, this weekend to compete in a tournament at St. Leo College and Tampa University.

The strong scores of the Blue Hose men's soccer team is not only a result of long practice hours and immense talent. Grunta explains that the team is close on the field as well as off.

"We have so much potential this year," he said. "The team has never been this close before. It is so talented and so deep. It's as if our dreams are being served up on a platter and all we have to do is reach out and grab them."

Women's Soccer: Blue Hose overturn Southern Indiana, vault to No. 7 in nation

The Presbyterian College women's soccer team entered the national rankings this week at the number seven in the latest NSCAA/Addidas NCAA Division II poll.

PC entered last week as the number one team in the Southeast Region, as well.

PC's first season win was against then-number-10-ranked Southern Indiana by a score of 1-0 in the first round at the Belmont Abbey College Classic.

Senior midfielder Leah Bailey scored the sole goal of the game and her first collegiate goal at the 20-minute mark.

Bailey scored her second goal the next day against USC-Aiken, which PC defeated 4-1. League officials named her the South Atlantic Conference/Pepsi Player of the week.

Bailey scored her goal at the seven-minute mark of an assist from senior midfielder Sara Plank. The lead increased to 2-0 when junior midfielder Jamie Harris scored at the 20-minute mark off an assist from senior forward Karen Markham. Harris again found the back of the net right before halftime at the 34-minute mark, when she was assisted by freshman midfielder Adair.

PC netted its final goal of the match at the 67-minute mark when junior forward Bethany Cole scored off Adair's second assist of the day.

PC's third season victory came last Saturday with a 2-0 victory over Belmont Abbey.

The win improved PC's record to 3-0-0, a record that they held upon battling Lenoir-Rhyne College this past Tuesday in Hickory, N.C. The game opened PC's South Atlantic Conference Schedule. No stats were available as of press time.

The Blue Hose play again this afternoon against Tusculum. The game is at 4:00 on the Pondo.

The End: "PC Bubble" offers solution to new housing policy

by Jay Howell
Friend of the Editors

Presbyterian College has received the multi-million-dollar Hew Grant. Several options exist for the money's use. Certain church leaders suggest the money be portioned into social causes, such as SVS and mission programs. Some suggest further technology updates, installing whole computers in each room. Fraternity court has thrown a bid for an underground fermentation facility. President Griffith warns, however, against taking the money for granted; many proposals for its use presuppose an endless supply of funds.

"Not so," argues Griffith, "We cannot possibly portion the money to all requests, because each dream would receive insufficient attention. Which is why PC has decided to unify the money under the claims of its students, the real customers. Students have made appeals for a new international dorm housing facility, which has been long in the coming. To both meet their claims, as well as reimburse them for the time during which they have gone without, we want to take their idea one-step-for-man, one-giant-leap-for-mankind further."

The Presbyterian College Intergalactic House will be built on Ceres, the largest asteroid currently orbiting within the Asteroid Belt between Mars and Jupiter. NASA, PC's freelance architectural firm, believes Ceres to be the best location, already in orbit and easy to dominate. To ensure an atmosphere on the lifeless rock (sparing students suffocation in the stale heart of oblivion), NASA plans to erect a thick glass sphere around the asteroid.

Because of its appearance, the Intergalactic Dorm has been affectionately dubbed the "PC Bubble."

Because of its nature, the PC Bubble disrupts the visitation hours policy. Ceres is as large around as New York City is long. The size difference causes a noticeable change in the day's length. With current policies, students may visit alternately-gendered dorms for roughly half the day. Given the length of Ceres' day, in order to keep the current policy, students would have roughly an hour, six minutes, and five seconds to visit before violating policy. They may safely return, however, in one hour, six minutes, and five seconds.

The biggest skepticism for the PC Bubble Project comes not from the government, surrounding community or pond ducks, but scientists. These men of cold facts argue that, because of its overall relentless climate, Ceres will never furnish human civilization, let alone a dormitory.

"Besides the fact that it is improbable, impossible, illogical and overall the silliest idea historically proposed," commented a furious researcher, "humanity will likely die in its failure. I'm going to lunch."

The planning committee allays all fears, however, claiming that, "(n)ot even solid facts will burst the dream of the PC Bubble."

The planning committee believes that the biggest threat to the project's success is a race of "alien ninja hiding just behind the eye of Jupiter." Students paying an extra $500 "Alien Ninja Fee" will live on the asteroid's luxurious west side, complete with manual plasma cannons and warp defectors protect the students from assault. By the Honor Code, the planning committee trusts students to vaporise neither Neville Hall nor India. Students refusing to pay the extra fee will be furnished with sharp rocks tied to their fingers for a defense system. Though one cannot doubt the effectiveness of sharp, tiny rocks against alien ninja, said students are likely to perish in droves. For this reason, the planning committee believes there will always be room for at least one more student in the PC Bubble.

"No," comments the planning committee, responding to inquiry regarding the plausibility of this concern, "we don't think we read too much science fiction at all. Not in the least."

Using current technology, transportation between the PC Bubble and the classroom would be nearly impossible. Plans stand-by to convert Neville's dome into a high-power transportation ray, whose use may be seen in old "Star Trek" episodes. Naturally, certain students who want to live in the PC Bubble will have reservations about the new technology. Some feel it is risky and dangerous to one's health.

"Yes, certain things could go wrong with the transportation, but really, the mishaps don't result so much in physical pain. Public humiliation, probably, but not pain. Whatever body parts are displaced in the transport to the Bubble are quite likely to be arranged properly upon return," hopes Public Safety Chief Mullhall.

The Housing Office expresses optimism regarding the effect of student living in regards to Clinton's public peace. "We hope the light years of vacuum between the PC Bubble and Clinton, SC, will suffice as a buffer for party noise. Our motto is, in space, no one can hear you groove."

New Quodlibet debates to start Tuesday

by Tara Sluder
Staff Writer

The first in a new series of student produced debates featuring PC faculty members will debut on Tuesday, October 5 in Belk Auditorium. The Quodlibet Convocation scheduled for Tuesday will feature Dr. James Skinner, Charles A. Dana professor of English, and technology consultant Wayne Smith presenting opposing views regarding the value of technology on campus and in today's society.

"Students want to hear from the faculty members," said Sarah Hahn, public relations intern and 1999 PC graduate. "What the professors have to say is just as important as what any respected speaker invited here has to say."

Internationally-acclaimed writer Ernest J. Gaines visits with PC community

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

Ernest J. Gaines, celebrated author of "A Gathering of Old Men," "The Autobiography of Miss Jane Pittman," "A Lesson Before Dying" and a host of other novels and short stories, spoke to a group of PC students, faculty, administrators and staff on Sept. 15 as part of Project Understanding's program to effect campus-wide conversation about diversity.

Gaines, whose visit with members of the PC community was provided through Furman University, discussed education and diversity issues, the art of writing and his 1993 novel, "A Lesson Before Dying," which is currently the topic of campus-wide discussion groups sponsored by Project Understanding.

Like all of Gaines' fictional works, "A Lesson Before Dying" is set in the fictional town of Bayonne, Louisiana, which, like the setting for the works of another great Southern writer—William Faulkner—is based on a real place with real people and real problems. Set in the 1940s before the triumph of the Civil Rights Movement, the novel examines the relationship between a young black man who is wrongfully convicted of murder and sentenced to death, and a young teacher who is charged with instilling him with knowledge and pride before his execution.

Gaines, a native of rural Louisiana and currently the writer in residence at the University of Southwest Louisiana, is no stranger to either the teaching profession or the setting of his fictional works, both of which play an important role in "A Lesson Before Dying." His inspiration for writing the novel was sparked in part, he said, by his experiences as a teacher in his native Louisiana.

According to Shelia Hill, director of multicultural affairs and student volunteer services, the novel is particularly relevant to the PC community because of its emphasis on student-teacher relationships.

"We met in May and decided that we wanted to have a conversation, and we wanted to utilize a book as the focus point or beginning point of that conversation," said Hill. "We looked at four books. Dr. King's 'Where Do We Go From Here: Chaos to Community or Community?', 'The Color of Water' by James McBride and 'A Lesson Before Dying' and 'A Gathering of Old Men' by Ernest Gaines... We decided to utilize 'A Lesson Before Dying' because it specifically addresses faculty-student interaction."

"This book taught me something about what it means to be a teacher and the struggle that all of us as teachers face," said Dr. Richard Baker, associate professor of philosophy, who, among other members of the College faculty and staff, is leading one of many discussion groups on the novel.

According to Hill, discussion

POINT

Quodlibet debates: CEP as you like it

Over the past several years, a number of PC students have complained that many CEP lecture events are "irrelevant" or downright "boring." Thanks to the efforts of a few students and faculty members, students now need look no further for an engaging, challenging and perhaps even entertaining lecture event.

With the new Quodlibet debate series that will begin Tuesday, students have the opportunity to see faculty members test their rhetorical skills in debates over ideas and issues that are relative to liberal education in general and to this community of learning in particular. Such debates--rooted in centuries-old academic traditions, conceived through the imagination and perspiration of students, and uniting the entire College community through the contemplation of serious ideas--represent the liberal arts at their finest; and students should not fail to be a part of these special events.

Two thumbs up to the students who planned the Quodlibet debates and to the faculty members and administrators who were willing to consider and implement student ideas.

"Lesson Before Dying" discussion groups first step toward greater diversity-awareness Few would argue that PC is in tremendous need of greater diversity awareness, and recently-formed discussion groups on Ernest Gaines's novel "A Lesson Before Dying" are a step in the right direction. Although no program or event can by itself bridge the racial divide at PC or in the larger society, we at the "Blue Stocking" believe that such discussion groups provide the necessary first step toward cross-cultural communication that is necessary for a united community. It is our hope that such discussion groups will bring together people of greatly varied backgrounds, and we urge all members of the PC community to participate in the discussion groups.

I must admit that when the last call came to board British Airways Flight 2226 for London's Gatwick Airport, I wondered if I had made the right choice. What would it be like there, in Oxford, without my family and friends for support? Would I miss out on everything at PC, and would Oxford student?

Four months is a long time. I was really prepared for this? My heart ached wrestling with these doubts, but somehow I kept walking and made my way onto the plane that would carry me to a place that would change my life forever.

My sophomore year I had the opportunity to work through PC's study abroad department and spend a semester at Oxford University, the oldest surviving university in the world. For a small-town Southern girl the whole idea was a little intimidating. As time went on, though, I became more and more excited about the experience that lay ahead. I could not have conceived in my wildest dreams what was in store.

I arrived at the Centre for Medieval and Renaissance Studies in early January. Here I lived in a dormitory with about forty American students. The program allowed me to study as an associate student of Keble College, one of the approximately forty colleges that make up Oxford University. One-on-one tutorials, small seminars and integrated lectures comprised the academic schedule for the Hilary term. Field trips to such places as Hampton Court Palace, the Tower of London and Kenilworth Castle added another dimension to life at CMRS. Though rigorous and at times, overwhelming, the program taught me what it is to live as an actual Oxford student.

My experience in Oxford was not confined to my studies. I made plenty of time to play and see the sights. Oxford itself is a truly beautiful, thriving city and offers everything from museums to great restaurants, shopping, nightclubs and pub life. As a member of the Oxford Union, I had the chance to see everything from debates on the existence of God to Jerry Springer. I also saw a play starring Richard Dreyfuss and the production of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" in Stratford-upon-Avon. Through Keble, I played on the women's rugby team. We played in the mud, tackled and loved it, making it to the Cuppers final. I also traveled to cities like York, London, and Edinburgh. I even spent St. Patrick's Day in Dublin, Ireland.

By studying abroad, I was not only exposed to a different culture and way of living, my eyes were opened to a much bigger world. For one small window in my life, I realized that I did not live in the past or in anticipation of the future, but in the moment itself.

Numerous groups on campus participated in Master Planning last week. Our sessions with the consultants were both informative and exciting as various groups contributed their ideas on what buildings to build and where. The consultants were definitely experts in their fields, however, I was impressed with the input of Several members of the Student Government and other PC folks were appointed to examine areas of significant parking troubles. They are dealing with the problems, especially those around construction sites. The Master Planning consultants found that PC has a 120 percent parking capacity. We have more parking than almost every other campus in the Southeast.

Scientists and others have been looking at larger issues as we on campus examine parking. These scientists are studying global warming, the buildup of harmful gases in our atmosphere, and the deterioration of the ozone layer. I feel that as these scientists look at the threat of global warming, we on campus should not look locally. By walking to class, the dining hall and various other locations, we can not only ease parking troubles but also save nonrenewable resources, prevent the buildup of harmful gases in our atmosphere and slow the deterioration of the ozone layer. We have a beautiful campus, which should continue to be lined with more trees, not more parking lots.

One of the significant issues raised during Master Planning, unfortunately, was parking. Last spring the Student Government decided that this was an important student concern and thus made examining parking a priority. Our new

Master planning seeks to align with strategic plan

by Kay Owen
Production Editor

As a continuation of the strategic planning during the 1998-99 academic year, the College is currently pursuing a master plan that will outline the College's physical improvements for the next 10 years and possibly beyond.

The first of such master plans was developed in 1911 and illustrates a vision of the front side of campus similar to how it is seen today. The current master plan is being developed by Watson/Tate Architects, Inc. of Columbia and Sasaki Associates, Inc. of Boston. Their job is to determine the building needs of the campus according to priorities set by the strategic plan concerning academic buildings, student areas and residence halls. They were contracted to determine square footage for buildings according to how much space will be needed to accommodate students and were concerned with how to responsibly spend money and still meet PC's needs.

The master plan should incorporate the needs and goals of the strategic plan and the priorities it sets. President John Griffith said that the goals of the plan should be strengthened by the master plan.

"In strategic planning we talked about what we feel we need to do over the next 10 years to strengthen the academic program, student life, etc.," he said. "So the master planning sessions began with a list of those things we need to do. What you see in the master plan is those needs and the best place for those needs."

The planning sessions began this summer when the consultants visited campus for the first time and met with administrators, faculty and staff to listen to the needs of the College, get a concept of the strategic plan and get a firsthand view of campus.

The second sessions were held the week of Sept. 20. They involved the faculty, staff, administration, coaches, students and townspeople. All members of the College community were given the opportunity to make suggestions, give their input and understand the concept of the master plan. SGA President Jay Philpott was pleased with the sessions.

"The college leadership involved so many," he said. "Every group had a chance to contribute to the sessions. This is important because the ten-year plan will affect everyone."

SGA Vice President Sara Hopper believes student involvement is crucial to developing an effective master plan.

"I think student involvement is important because this is our school, and we know what PC is made of," she said. "Students know what is needed right now. It is very important to get to get all aspects of PC involved in master planning because it is important to get all points of view about what is a priority for the College to look at in improvements."

Michael Watson of Watson/Tate Architects told students that their perspective is important to the way he and his associates develop the physical layout of campus, and he looked for recurring themes in their discussions. Parking and changes in residential accommodations were frequent and popular topics among students.

The plans themselves are divided into four parts: the West Plaza, the Garden Plaza, the East Plaza and what is being termed a sports complex or recreational area. The plans presented several layouts for each area of campus. The West Plaza, or the front of campus, will remain very similar to its current state. The plan is to add music and visual arts buildings to this area. The Garden Plaza currently houses the student center and football field. This would change with the current plans to move the football field and expand students' areas. The East Plaza would gain some residence halls and possibly an amphitheater near Lake Orl. Finally, the athletic facilities would be arranged together in the area Templeton currently occupies and beyond so that all sports and coaches would be centralized. That would move the football stadium and the tennis courts behind Douglas House from the academic and residential areas to a unified sports complex. This area would also include an improved nature trail and hiking paths.

Student Union Board President Kai Kalutz said that she was pleased to see that the obvious need to expand the campus center is being addressed.

"It was exciting to see that student activities and campus life outside the classroom has a priority in the planning for the future," she said.

The Master Planning Task Force, compiled of faculty, administrators and students, was present at all of the sessions to gauge responses and compile priorities. The task force was developed by Griffith, and he charged its members with presenting to the development committee of the Board of Trustees a physical plan for the College. Griffith was also present at all of the sessions and mostly was pleased with the turnout.

"We had very good attendance from faculty, administration and the town," he said. "I was disappointed with student attendance, but I do know it was a very busy week for them and that this was an undertaking they may not have understood. The students that did come knew the campus and the school's traditions, and their input was very helpful. What students did miss was knowing how the strategic plan fits with the master plan."

Philpott said the students who were involved offered many suggestions and voiced their concerns and interests in the planning process.

"The students who attend represented the student body well in various areas," he said. "Students expressed their concerns and ideas in areas such as the dining hall, the placement of academic buildings, the campus center and Greek housing."

The next step in master planning is to develop a preferred scenario. It will be presented to the Board of Trustees at the Nov. 9-10 meetings. From there, the Board will critique the plan, and it will be left to the task force to make a final version. By the Board's February meeting there should be a master plan for the next 10 years that could potentially guide the campus developments and construction for 50-80 years.

"The long view is to take care of immediate needs and to set standards that build on what we've got, and that should take us well into the next century," Griffith said.

There is no financial plan set at this point. That will be completed after a finalized master plan. Priorities are coming into place, however. First priority academically seems to be an academic science center, then possibly an expanded student life center.

"There's going to be a domino effect here," said Griffith. "But we know from strategic planning and a retreat last spring with administrators what, in broad strokes, needs to come first: we need housing; we desperately need science facilities. We know from the strategic plan what needs to happen is to relocate the football field to accommodate this. It does not mean that music and art aren't important, but it will take time."

Housing being a priority comes from the move to a completely residential campus. There is apartment-style housing planned for the West Plaza, and the new residences would give priority to seniors.

"Clearly what you build that is new and different goes to upperclassmen," said Griffith, "and that makes sense because upperclassmen are ready to get out of dorm-style living and ready to set up a home. That is what apartment-style living is all about."

In making changes to campus and adding more academic and residential buildings, the master plan seeks not to lose the current appearance of PC.

"This is a magnificent campus," said Griffith. "We need this plan to keep up the appearance so it maintains its current aesthetics."

The beauty of the campus relates to students' concerns for parking. Since PC is a residential campus, parking was not figured into the 1911 master plan. At that time students did not have cars on campus. Much has changed, and parking is a modern necessity. However, Griffith believes it should not take priority over the general beauty and symmetry of campus. He says it costs $1000 per parking space built on campus. He says the school's obligation is to provide a space for every car, but not to provide a space for every car at every building on campus. Parking is not an entitlement to students. Therefore, walking is encouraged so that everyone may enjoy the natural beauty of campus.

"Do we have a responsibility as an educational institution to provide a space for driving from Grotnes to Harrington Peachtree's No.," said Griffith.

PC IN BRIEF

Eta Xi chapter of Alpha Delta Pi wins sorority's highest national award

Alpha Delta Pi Sorority's Eta Xi chapter at Presbyterian College won their sorority's highest possible award at the sorority's 149th annual convention this past summer.

Every year, Alpha Delta Pi Sorority awards the Golden Lion Award to chapters that qualify as the best in the nation. This year, the sorority awarded six Golden Lion Awards. The Alpha Delta Pi chapter at PC is the youngest chapter ever to receive this award in the sorority's history.

To be eligible for the Golden Lion Award, a chapter of Alpha Delta Pi must have been established for at least ten years. The Eta Xi chapter at PC celebrates its tenth year on campus this year.

In addition, a chapter must obtain other awards for several consecutive years before it is eligible to receive the Golden Lion Award. According to Dottie Sanders, Eta Xi chapter president, these prerequisite awards range from recognition in service to recognition in scholarship, finances and recruitment.

"The Alpha Delta Pi's at PC are very proud of this award, because it shows the hard work and dedication that we have put into our chapter over the past ten years," said Sanders. "We would like to thank everyone for their support and encouragement. This wonderful award could not have been won without the help of many people. It is nice to be chosen one of the best from the 'First and Finest' sorority."

After inaugural year, Griffith excited about road ahead

by Hank Coleman
Staff Writer

What would you say to a brand new PC football stadium out near the townhouses? How would you feel about a new apartment style dorm or a huge addition to Springs Campus Center? Where would you fit into a 1500 person student body? Would you like a real PC chapel looking down the quad towards Neville Hall? Dr. Griffith's goals for the school and PC's Master and Strategic Plans make the future look bright and exciting not only through new buildings but also with new policies and programs on campus.

It's been a full year since Dr. John V. Griffith's inauguration as the sixteenth president of Presbyterian College, and signs of improvement can be seen all around.

"I'm excited about all of the changes," said Griffith.

Griffith set many goals for himself this past year, like getting to know the students, faculty, alumni, trustees, and the different traditions of Presbyterian College. He also restructured his administration with new vice presidents for academic affairs, institutional advancement and finance. Along with continuing to meet the people of PC, Griffith wanted to find more ways for the faculty and staff to interact with the students like the Student Union Board's Homecoming Gala.

"It creates a wonderful spirit on campus, and those two goals will always be on my list to accomplish because every year there will be a new freshman class to meet," said Griffith.

The President's most important goal of last year was to develop a Strategic Plan.

Now that last year's goals have been accomplished and the new Strategic Plan, PC 2010, is in place, Griffith's main goal for this year is to begin implementing the plan. Based on where he wants PC to be in ten years, Griffith and his faculty will start to accomplish this year's goals of reorganizing the core curriculum, developing an exact program and use for the new Carol International House, that will be finished around the end of March and adding a Mentoring Program which will change the faculty advisor system. Another goal for the president is to make sure that the college meets its financial, fund raising and admission objectives.

"Last year we met all of our goals in those areas and exceeded them," said Griffith. "I was very happy with all of the college's hard work, and we will be working even harder this year."

A big improvement to the campus has been the addition of Ethernet connections in every dorm room.

"It was a very specific goal of the Strategic Plan to bring higher technology and direct internet access onto campus," said Griffith. "We have had a smoother-than-expected transition into dorm room access because of the hard work of the Resnet team. I also look forward to faculty implementing technology into their courses."

Another goal for the Strategic Plan is to have 1425 students at PC by the year 2010 with a freshman class of about 400.

"Any more students than that would seriously undermine our objectives as a small liberal arts college," said the President.

Griffith's implementation of the Strategic Plan led to the new admissions building, the Carol International House and the food court in Springs Campus Center. Fundraising for the new soccer stadium has just been finished and ground breaking will start this winter, so that the field will be ready for the next soccer season. This winter, over Christmas Break, Greenville Dining Hall's main dining area will be completely overhauled into a mall-style food court setting. In addition, GDH will go through major renovations this summer, changing the whole style of the lunch lines, seating arrangements and the grill area to bring the dining hall up-to-date.

"A lot of our staff have been slowly going through retraining," said Griffith. "I see many changes that I like, and I'm very excited about them."

For the first time since 1911 when the college built the West Plaza between South Adair and South Broad Streets, PC has an exciting new Master Plan that will bring very visible changes to the campus like no other plan has done before. The new PC Master Plan designed this year looks beyond the ten year Strategic Plan. The plan lays the foundation for a new apartment style dorm, a brand new football stadium near Fraternity Court, an expansion of Springs Center where the old stadium is now located, and a new science facility to replace Richardson Science Hall.

Staff Spotlight: "Big Jim" patrols campus, studies Psychology

by Dan Dill
Staff Writer

You are walking around campus late at night, and you spot a golf cart with a large man sitting inside. He gives you a smile and a wave, no matter who you are. This is James "Big Jim" Black.

Starting in March 1993 on the maintenance crew, he has been an officer on Public Safety since January 8, 1997. Black graduated from Clinton High School in 1982 and is married (sorry ladies) with two children.

Not only does Black patrol campus, he is also a part-time student, majoring in Psychology. He projects he will graduate in three years and is not ruling out the possibility of running for SGA office next year. Regardless, he has to get his CEP's.

Black has always wanted to get involved in law enforcement, and he saw Public Safety as a great opportunity to get his feet wet, as well as continue his education. He has found that his real love is for the students, though. He loves being out of uniform around campus because everyone is so accepting of him.

Black's favorite current police shows are "Homicide" and "Cops." Black says that a lot of people get into law enforcement because of the life-or-death action they see on "Cops," and then end up disappointed.

When he isn't patrolling and studying, Black belts out the tunes at First Baptist Church. Choir is where Black was reacquainted with his future wife and with God. God has had a big impact on his recent career moves.

"I believe this is where God wants me right now," said Black.

Students attempt to bring African-American sorority to campus

by Skye Earls
Staff Writer

Some different Greek letters seem to be floating around on the shirts of students passing by on campus. Students may even think in surprise, "Hark! Lo! What is this?" Something is amiss. As the fall breeze whistles through the air of Clinton, and students are just beginning to get in the swing of things, recruitment is just around the corner. Confusion infiltrates the minds of those interested in Greek life and others. The answer to the puzzle lays in three words: Delta Sigma Theta.

Although in past history, African-American students have started chapters of Greek origin, none of these predominantly African-American fraternities and sororities survived. Now four young women, seniors Dawn Cates and Adrian Saratt and juniors Tanisha Jenkins and Rachel Sloan, are attempting to bring a chapter of the sorority Delta Sigma Theta to the Presbyterian College campus.

"Our main goal is to start a chapter here; whenever we get 12 girls we can start a chapter here," Cates said.

Staff Assistant Debra Faucett is a sorority sister of Delta Sigma Theta and helped the girls start and participate in Greek life.

"My personal goal for my sisters on the campus of Presbyterian College is to expose them to 'Greek' life in an undergraduate setting, and to continue to dedicate themselves to the goals of our sorority," she said.

Already they are each members through the Laurens Alumni Chapter. According to Sheila Hill, Director of Students for Multicultural & Volunteer Services, Delta Sigma Theta will be listed as a sorority affiliated with Presbyterian College in the soon to be released View Book. However, the four members know the hope for a chapter will take a while if it is to come true.

"It's [to get a chapter] gonna take a while. We don't plan on getting one next year. Adrian and I are graduating next year. It's a long term goal," Cates said.

There are a couple of other obstacles challenging the chartering of this sorority.

"There are not enough African-American females on campus, enough multi-cultural females on campus, who are interested," Jenkins said.

Nevertheless, this is one dilemma the girls wish to solve by bringing the opportunities offered by this sorority to life.

"Our sorority is not all black... we just wanted something to bring here for us, that we could be able to do, and maybe to help us get other multicultural students who would like to come to this school," Jenkins said. "Because Greek life is a very important part of college to some people. And when people apply to a school and realize there is no African-American based sorority, they may decide not to come. That shouldn't be your main reason for coming to school, but it is a big part of it."

The Assistant Dean of Students and advisor to the Panhellenic Council, Alison Bishop, observes this problem when it arrives.

"From African-American girls I've heard they would feel more comfortable if there were an African-American based sorority," Bishop said.

According to the supporters, there are many benefits if this sorority joins the PC campus.

"I think it [the PC campus] will benefit a lot because it will bring more multicultural students. As far as we're concerned, at the most, I think there's like 15 black females on campus versus, maybe 40 something males, and I mean on campus there are 1100 students. You can tell, the ratio there is not good at all, and I think it would be beneficial a lot because it would bring more diversity to the campus," Cates said.

The Delta members have certain inspirations that make them want to take their part in this sorority.

"What really made me want to do it [the sorority] was the Delta oath, and the first line says, 'I strive to reach the highest education, spiritual and moral, which I can possibly attain,'" Saratt said.

Yet the other roadblock obstructing the birth of Delta Sigma Theta, is one that sets standards.

"We don't just accept anybody. You can't be a freshman, you have to have 30 hours, you have to have a 2.5 GPA and you have to maintain that throughout your college career. It's a lot of characteristics we look for to be a Delta," Jenkins said.

They emphasize how important the commitment to the sorority is.

"Make sure it's something you want to do, it's a lot of hard work, and you want to make sure it's the right sorority for you," Cates said.

On January 13, 1913, 22 undergraduate students founded Delta Sigma Theta at Howard University in Washington, DC. There are over 190,000 members and 870 plus chapters. Their colors consist of crimson and cream. Delta Sigma Theta concentrates on the ideals of Sisterhood, Scholarship and Public Service.

It operates under the Five Point Thrust: Economic development, educational development, International Awareness and Involvement, Physical and Mental Health, Political Awareness and Involvement.

They are involved in many service activities such as Habitat for Humanity and the Delta Academy, which is for girls 11-16 and teaches them etiquette and other lessons of life.

"We're all about public service," Jenkins said.

Other sororities already chartered on the PC campus invited them to be involved with them in some of their service work, and the Panhellenic Council invited them to contribute a member-at-large.

"They [the sorority members] have received very positive and warm reception from Greeks and other organizations on campus. MSU has agreed to assist with the cost of the fundraiser of their choice... Having Delta Sigma Theta on campus will aid the admission's effort in the recruitment of African-American females to PC," Faucett said.

"I think it's [the girls striving to get the sorority chartered] wonderful! I definitely want them to colonize and attract young women to PC," Bishop said. "I think its great that the girls are doing it. It's the best way for them to do it."

Right now, the students are just working towards getting a Delta Sigma Theta chapter in the long term by attracting more African-American females to the campus.

"A lot of people on campus show a lot of love, and a lot of support for us... and we're just very thankful to them," Jenkins said.

PC discusses diversity, Ernest Gaines's "A Lesson Before Dying"

groups on "A Lesson Before Dying" are intended to bring together a diverse group of people in the PC community for serious reflection on the issues raised by the book.

"One exchange in our conversation with Mr. Gaines that hit home for me was the fact that it's not fear of the other person but of how I may be received by my peer group and friends that we are not more willing to talk across the racial divide," said Hill. "He mentioned that sometimes it's difficult to be the bridge to bring everyone together, he hosts parties at his home with a fairly mixed group of people, but they would not normally get together if it were not for something that he's doing," said Hill. "That's what we have to do here. We have to provide those intentional opportunities for people to come together who normally wouldn't in order to have a good time, and they may very well strike up an other conversation on the basis of the fact that they had a good interchange at some point. That's what we're trying to do."

From looking at the lists of people involved in the discussion groups, it looks like we've got two or three in each group that know each other and the rest probably don't ever interact with each other," said Hill. "That's what we're after."

Discussion groups on "A Lesson Before Dying" will continue throughout the fall semester and the Winter Conference and will culminate in a special program at the end of the spring semester, according to Hill.

Tuesday debate on technology to open Quodlibet series had its beginnings last semester in Associate Professor of Philosophy Dr. Richard Baker's ancient and medieval philosophy class. After a CEP sparked the interest of students, the class discussed their desire for CEPs to be more relevant to the issues on campus. Inspired by lecture material covered in class, students devised the idea for the Quodlibet series.

Quodlibet is a Latin term that means "disputed question." The term originated at the University of Paris during the Middle Ages where debates were held every year during Advent and Lent. Each professor at the university was required to participate in at least one debate during his career. Topics of discussion included religion, morality and philosophy. At the conclusion of these debates, the floor was open to audience members who could address questions to the participants.

Four students--Bob Ehrhardt, Luke Ellis, Sarah Hahn and Cliff McKinney--designed a series of debates and lectures fashioned after the medieval practice at the University of Paris that they had studied in Baker's class.

"We drafted a proposal in which we stated two goals," said Ellis. "First of all, we wanted to increase student participation and enthusiasm at CEPs. Secondly, we wanted to use the resources that PC has on hand to address issues relevant to the campus."

The committee of four students chose the issue to be discussed and invited Skinner and Smith to present their views at the convocation. Skinner will begin the morning session at 11:00 by presenting his views on the subject, followed by Smith, who will briefly give the audience a preview of his own views. Later that evening at 7:30, Smith will elaborate fully upon his opinions. At the conclusion of the program there will be moderated questions prepared by some of the students, and then the floor will open for all of the audience members to ask questions.

"The idea for this convocation is somewhat interesting," said Smith. "It's great to be able to have a debate (or at least a discussion) about an obviously relevant topic for the PC community that provides students, faculty and administration the opportunity to hear some reasoned arguments for various sides of an issue."

The unique aspect of the Quodlibet series lies in its student-run format. Students choose both the issues to be discussed and the faculty members who will debate those issues. The small, four-student committee in existence wishes for more students to become involved in planning these events and are open to any suggestions that the student body has.

"This is a wonderful opportunity for students to hear professors debate hot issues on campus," said Baker. "The goal here is to receive student interest in CEP events and create an almost festive atmosphere."

A similar convocation has already been scheduled for the spring semester, but the topic and speakers are still undecided.

"Convocation means 'called together,'" said Skinner. "We're called together to discuss matters that are serious to our community. I hope that we can establish a discussion of important issues that will invite serious consideration."

Football loses heartbreakers to Lenoir-Rhyne, Carson-Newman

by Doodle Harris

After a valiant 2-0 start for the football team, the Blue Hose have faced tough competitors in close games the past two Saturdays. Currently with an even record of 2-2, #20 ranked Presbyterian College hopes to better their percentage against unranked Tusculum tomorrow.

Last week, in a game determined by a field goal during the second period of overtime play, PC lost a heartbreaker against the Lenoir-Rhyne Bears in Hickory, N.C. The final score was 24-21 only after Lenoir-Rhyne kicked the winning field goal from 35 yards out. Making the loss even more bitter, PC was winning at the beginning of the fourth quarter 14-7 when the Bears squeaked another touchdown in the final ten seconds to send the game into overtime.

With 5:44 remaining in the first quarter, Lenoir-Rhyne scored a touchdown which was to be the only points posted for the first half of play. However, in the third quarter, sophomore halfback Joey Bell ran for 9 yards to tie the score. Shortly after, sophomore Todd Cunningham found junior wide receiver Travis Smith who took the ball the remaining 40 yards to the uprights to put PC ahead. Cunningham ended the game with 145 passing yards after playing only the second half and Smith caught six passes for

In the first overtime, the Bears struck first, but PC answered with a 10-yard pass from Cunningham to junior wide receiver Di Young. Also posting impressive stats for the game was sophomore running back Donald Wilson, who rushed for 99 yards on 20 carries, and junior quarterback Blake Wilkey, who completed 12 of 19 passes for 116 yards.

Similarly, PC lost another game by three points at their Homecoming game against the #1 ranked Carson-Newman Eagles.

During the game, two Blue Hose single game records fell to excellent performances by Cunningham, Smith and senior wideout Brad Boleman. Cunningham broke the single-game pass completions record set two years ago by current teammate Wilkey. Cunningham had 29 completed passes for 311 yards.

PC's single game pass reception record was broken by Smith, who increased the record from 11 to 12. Smith has the remainder of his junior year and his senior year to accumulate 350 more receiving yards, two touchdowns and 39 passes to exceed career records in those categories.

Senior wideout Brad Boleman continues to be a driving force on the team, catching 9 of Cunningham's record setting passes. Prior to last week's game, Boleman led the SAC with 8.7 receptions per game. Currently Boleman is also on track for surpassing the SAC record for most receptions in a single season (62).

Women's Soccer: Lady Blue Hose undefeated allow opponents total of one goal this season

So far this fall, the Presbyterian College women's soccer team has been on the ball. With the results of the September 28 game against Mars-Hill unavailable at press time, the team is 7-0 overall and 4-0 in SAC play. The Blue Hose have held their opponents to one goal in seven games.

Last Saturday saw the team's most impressive win. With high school seniors for visitation day in attendance, the team trampled Carson-Newman with a final score of 7-0. Leading the scoring drive for PC was senior forward Karen Markham who scored four goals in the 51st, 57th, 65th and 68th minutes of play. Also making contributions to the team's score was freshman midfielder Christina Ball with one goal and three assists and junior midfielder Ashley Davies with one goal and one assist. The first goal of the game came from junior midfielder Jamie Harris following a PC throw-in.

Volleyball team 9-3 overall, 5-2 in SAC

Despite last week's loss, the PC volleyball team enjoys a prosperous season with a 9-3 overall record and a 5-2 showing in SAC play.

Last Saturday, Gardner Webb proved just too powerful for the Blue Hose. The Bulldogs swept PC with three wins: 15-7, 15-3, and 15-6 under the leadership of junior Linette Ramsey who contributed 21 kills and 10 digs. Helping the Blue Hose in the match was sophomore outside hitter Ariska Walker with 10 kills and 11 digs. A new addition to this year's team, Janelle McVerry tacked on 30 assists. Also with notable contributions was senior outside hitter Stephanie Cloud with six digs and junior outside hitter Rachel Bishop with five kills in eleven attempts.

In the past two weeks, the volleyball team also won matches against Mars-Hill and Carson Newman. On September 21, the Blue Hose slaughtered the Lady Lions of Mars-Hill College with three straight wins. Leading the scoring during the match was Walker with 22 kills and 18 digs. After trailing in the first game 13-7 and the second game 10-5, the Blue Hose mounted a comeback. The second game comeback was due in a large part to the efforts of sophomore middle hitter Kati Scott who scored five straight points. Honorable mention in the match also goes to sophomore Leah Easter who had seven kills and two aces, Cloud who had 16 digs and McVerry with 44 assists.

Also helping the Hose was an efficient defense. During the entire game, Carson-Newman never had the opportunity to take a single shot at the PC net. PC dominated the ball throughout the game with 35 shots at the goal.

PC gave up its only goal during their game against Gardner-Webb University on September 22. Scoring in their 4-1 win against the Bulldogs was Harris with a pass from senior midfielder Leah Bailly, freshman forward Jessi Adair, and Davis in the first half. After Gardner Webb scored early in the second half, sophomore Kim Counts tacked on PC's final goal off an assist from Markham.

In other soccer news, Harris was named the SAC's Pepsi Player for the week of September 20. Harris was chosen for her efforts in PC's early win's against Lenoir-Rhyne and Tusculum. As of that week, Harris had recorded two goals and one assist, ranking fifth in the SAC in points per match with 1.8.

PC's defeat against Carson Newman was somewhat more emotional after the Blue Hose lost the first game of the match and the second game called for extra points. The final scores were 19-15, 17-15, 15-8 and 15-12. Walker had 24 kills and 15 digs and senior middle blocker Kinsley Craven also had double digits with 11 kills and 11 blocks. McVerry contributed 50 assists and Cloud served 21 digs.

At press time, results from the Sept. 28 match against Catawba College and the Sept. 30 match against Wingate University were unavailable. The Lady's Blue Hose' next game is October 5 in Greenville Tennessee against Tusculum.

Men's Soccer leads region

With seven games and only one loss under their belts, the Blue Hose Men's Soccer team is well on their way to the season of their lives. As of September 20, PC was ranked #10 in the Adidas/NSCAA NCAA Division II Top 25, a poll released weekly. Since this poll, the team has played in two SAC games, tallying one loss to Gardner-Webb University and one win against Carson-Newman College. The team's record stands at an impressive 6-1-0 and 2-1 in the SAC. Prior to the loss to Gardner-Webb, the team had not been scored against in their first four games of the season.

The entire squad as well as individual players have been contributing to the success of this year's team. Senior co-captain Brian Giunta was awarded SAC player of the week for the week of September 13 after his performance against Tusculum College. Sean Warren, a newcoming forward has really shone this season scoring six goals out of his 19 shots this season. This freshman from Atlanta, Ga. is one of the four newcomers to the team, three freshmen and one transfer. Injured players returned this week for action against Gardner-Webb and then Carson-Newman, after a couple of weeks out. The team is excited to have senior second team All-SAC Ryan Comer back on defense after a shoulder injury. Also, sophomore Jason Prince is back after surgery at the midfielder position.

"I think our success this season is a result of many things. We are all working toward the same goals, we all know and respect our roles on the team, and we're all working hard to help each other," said Stephen Replogle, sophomore midfielder.

The Blue Hose played their second game of the week on Saturday, September 26 when PC regained their stamina and beat Carson-Newman 3-1. The stands, as well as the grass, were packed with avid fans giving PC the spirit they needed. The game looked as if it was going to be Carson-Newman's win after a sunken penalty kick in the first half. Carson-Newman up on the board first 1-0. After many barely missed shots by PC, 21 attempts at the goal, and unpenetrable defense on both sides, PC finally attacked the goal at the end of the second quarter. Better late than never, though, and once PC began their rampage of the goal, they never looked back. In the final 5:15 of the game, PC finally sunk the goals they had been shooting all day. Sophomore midfielder Jeff Hendrix shot the first one with Jim Price assisting the goal. Junior defender Warren Turner pelted the ball in his solo shot from 30 yards back less than three minutes later to score the second goal of the day. Michael Napier, sophomore playing at forward knocked in a shot on the goal to complete the game with an assist by midfielder Walter Howard.

"I was impressed by our performance on Saturday. We didn't give up and kept going strong the whole game. We really came back and proved ourselves in the final minutes of the game. We had been attacking all day on offense, but a lot of our attempts at goal hit the post or cross bar. We were excited when we rallied and scored three goals in five minutes."

For the rest of the season, the team is attempting to keep up the stamina which has been driving them, taking the season one step at a time, and hopefully ending the season Conference champs with a respectable shot at the NCAA tournament.

The Blue Hose continue their season Wednesday, September 29 against Mars Hill College at PC. As of press time, no stats were available.

Football loses heartbreakers to Lenoir-Rhyne, Carson-Newman

by Doodle Harris
Content Editor

After a valiant 2-0 start for the football team, the Blue Hose have faced tough competitors in close games the past two Saturdays. Currently with an even record of 2-2, #20 ranked Presbyterian College hopes to better their percentage against unranked Tusculum tomorrow.

Last week, in a game determined by a field goal during the second period of overtime play, PC lost a heartbreaker against the Lenoir-Rhyne Bears in Hickory, N.C. The final score was 24-21 only after Lenoir-Rhyne kicked the winning field goal from 35 yards out. Making the loss even more bitter, PC was winning at the beginning of the fourth quarter 14-7 when the Bears squeaked another touchdown in the final ten seconds to send the game into overtime.

With 5:44 remaining in the first quarter, Lenoir-Rhyne scored a touchdown which was to be the only points posted for the first half of play. However, in the third quarter, sophomore halfback Joey Bell ran for 9 yards to tie the score. Shortly after, sophomore Todd Cunningham found junior wide receiver Travis Smith who took the ball the remaining 40 yards to the uprights to put PC ahead. Cunningham ended the game with 145 passing yards after playing only the second half and Smith caught six passes for 91 yards.

In the first overtime, the Bears struck first, but PC answered with a 10-yard pass from Cunningham to junior wide receiver Di Young. Also posting impressive stats for the game was sophomore running back Donald Wilson, who rushed for 99 yards on 20 carries, and junior quarterback Blake Wilkey, who completed 12 of 19 passes for 116 yards.

Similarly, PC lost another game by three points at their Homecoming game against the #1 ranked Carson-Newman Eagles.

During the game, two Blue Hose single game records fell to excellent performances by Cunningham. Smith and senior wideout Brad Boleman. Cunningham broke the single-game pass completions record set two years ago by current teammate Wilkey. Cunningham had 29 completed passes for 311 yards.

PC's single game pass reception record was broken by Smith, who increased the record from 11 to 12. Smith has the remainder of his junior year and his senior year to accumulate 350 more receiving yards, two touchdowns and 39 passes to exceed career records in those categories.

Senior wideout Brad Boleman continues to be a driving force on the team, catching 9 of Cunningham's record setting passes. Prior to last week's game, Boleman led the SAC with 8.7 receptions per game. Currently Boleman is also on track for surpassing the SAC record for most receptions in a single season (62).

Women's Soccer: Lady Blue Hose undefeated allow opponents total of one goal this season

So far this fall, the Presbyterian College women's soccer team has been on the ball. With the results of the September 28 game against Mars-Hill unavailable at press time, the team is 7-0 overall and 4-0 in SAC play. The Blue Hose have held their opponents to one goal in seven games.

Last Saturday saw the team's most impressive win. With high school seniors for visitation day in attendance, the team trampled Carson-Newman with a final score of 7-0. Leading the scoring drive for PC was senior forward Karen Markham who scored four goals in the 51st, 57th, 65th and 68th minutes of play. Also making contributions to the team's score was freshman midfielder Christina Ball with one goal and three assists and junior midfielder Ashley Davies with one goal and one assist. The first goal of the game came from junior midfielder Jamie Harris following a PC throw-in.

Volleyball team 9-3 overall, 5-2 in SAC

Despite last week's loss, the PC volleyball team enjoys a prosperous season with a 9-3 overall record and a 5-2 showing in SAC play.

Last Saturday, Gardner Webb proved just too powerful for the Blue Hose. The Bulldogs swept PC with three wins: 15-3, 15-3, and 15-6 under the leadership of junior Lanette Ramsour who contributed 21 kills and 10 digs. Helping the Blue Hose in the match was sophomore outside hitter Aiska Walker with 10 kills and 11 digs. A new addition to this year's team, Janelle McVerry tacked on 30 assists. Also with noticeable contributions was senior outside hitter Stephanie Cloud with six digs and junior outside hitter Rachel Bishop with five kills in eleven attempts.

Athletic director Allen Morris announces retirement

by Hank Coleman
Sports Editor

A true leader on and off the playing fields will be leaving PC at the end of this academic year. For the past five years, Allen Morris has led the Blue Hose Athletic Department as the athletic director, but early last week he announced his intentions to retire at the end of this academic year. Morris will retire to pursue other opportunities and to spend more time at home with his family. He plans to remain in Clinton with his wife during their retirement.

"Allen Morris is a gentleman who embodies the spirit of the College he loves and serves," said Presbyterian College President John V. Griffith. "While it is difficult to predict an individual's legacy, I suspect Allen Morris's tenure will be remembered as a time of systematic strengthening of all intercollegiate athletics."

Morris was a standout tennis player while attending Presbyterian College. He was selected as an alternate member on the National Davis Cup teams from 1954-56 representing the United States against other countries of the world. After graduating from PC in 1956, Morris arrived at the apex of this professional career by reaching the fourteenth place on the world tennis rankings and advancing to the quarterfinals at Wimbledon. He later won singles championships in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and New York and won the United States Senior Clay Court

College considers reforms to core curriculum

by Honey Smith
Staff Writer

Late last August Presbyterian College administrators met in Trion, S.C. to debate reforming the core curriculum. The council's vision was to integrate studies and relate those studies to real life.

"We ought to focus more on linking the liberal arts with the world of work," said Dr. David Gillespie, dean of the faculty and vice-president for academic affairs.

This issue is extremely important to the future of PC because it will affect what academic course PC will follow.

Four different commissions have struggled with this issue for the past year. The faculty called a meeting last Monday to discuss alternative proposals.

"These proposals are just ideas meant to begin discussion," said Dr. James Skinner, Charles A. Dana professor of English.

Both students and professors are up in arms for fear they will be adversely effected by the changes, though no current student body members will be affected.

"Hopefully, they will involve students along the way," said Jay Philpott, student body president. Philpott declined to comment further without knowing what definite changes will be made.

In some cases, though, professors will have to make radical changes to decades-old habits. Since the current suggestions are so fiercely debated and since so much red tape is involved, the final plan could possibly not go into effect before 2003.

The Trion Proposal is not concrete, but its four main goals encompass many of the other goals set forth by the other reformers. First, a freshman interdisciplinary study requirement could be enacted, in which entering freshmen would have two new class requirements, communications and world cultures.

"A communications class to study computer use, speech, media analysis and writing skills," said Gillespie, "would turn the writing center into the true 'center' of campus."

In the world cultures class, freshmen would study western civilization's impact on the world and examine the character of culture as it is known today.

Secondly, the college would enact a senior capstone requirement, in which computer use and internships would help students to gain greater knowledge about their major.

Thirdly, a mentoring program would help create a tighter bond between students and faculty. One faculty member would be assigned 15 freshmen to advise on curriculum, and he or she would meet with students to reflect on books and CEPs. A freshman seminar for one hour credit could possibly be included.

"The new requirements would be beneficial to the campus community," said sophomore Julie Roach. "This will allow us to relate our lives to society today."

POINT

Classic texts should have priority in Presbyterian College's core-curriculum

For the first time in over three decades, Presbyterian College is taking a serious look at its core curriculum, and we at the "Blue Stocking" believe that such serious consideration could not be more overdue.

The world of today is vastly different from the world of thirty years ago, and it is, therefore, imperative that PC adapt to our changing society in order to be competitive in the next century. The computer revolution of the past two decades has rapidly changed human society and is moving the planet ever-closer to the "global village" about which Marshall McLuhan prophesized thirty years ago. In this new society, consideration of technology and diversity is more necessary than ever before, and reformers have rightly proposed that the College's core-curriculum give greater emphasis to both these areas.

There is always the danger, however, that adapting core-curriculum to fit a changing society may compromise the values of liberal arts education. Liberal learning is, to use the words of Matthew Arnold, "the best that has been thought or said." In other words, liberal arts education is about academic traditions, not academic fads; and while customs and technologies change, classic texts—works that have been accorded a special place in our culture—have proven through the test of time that they will always continue to inspire, inform and challenge us. While computer technology can allow us to perform tasks that would have been impossible thirty years ago, no technical activity can replace the value of reading and rereading the classic texts that have shaped human experience through the centuries. This encounter with the great thinkers of the past has always been central to liberal education, and it should remain central to this institution. We urge core-curriculum reformers to maintain this focus on timeless texts even as they seek to adapt PC to a changing world.

MSU president thanks College for success of Diversity Week

The '99 Diversity Week celebration was a blast. The week began with a Cultural Movie Marathon and concluded with a SNS service. The week also included an International Food Fair and Reggae Band at the Spring Plaza on Friday and Diversity Talent Search and the Cultural Bowl earlier in the week. The winners of the talent search were Joe Evans in first place with a $20 gift certificate to Gooney Birds, Tom Flueckiger in second place with a $10 gift certificate to Gooney Birds and Nikki Richardson and John Catoe in third place with Reggae Fest shirts.

The winners of the Cultural Bowl were SVS in first place with $5 gift certificates to Wal-Mart, AIBS/SEE in second place with a $25 gift certificate to Eggs Up and SGA in third place with coupons to Pizza Inn. All other participants received a coupon from either Burger King or McDonalds.

MSU would like to thank everyone who came out to the Diversity Week activities. The week was a great success.

Video poker focus of debate in current issue of "Blue Stocking"

This issue of the "Blue Stocking" features debate over video poker, the fate of which South Carolina voters will decide in the Nov. 2 election, with op-ed pieces by Bob Ehrhardt and Katie Dobbins on page 3.

Correction

In the last issue of the "Blue Stocking," Adrienne Saratt's name was misspelled. We extend our apologies to Ms. Saratt.

One of the Student Government's goals this year was to increase the use of the Safe Ride Shuttle and to come up with a routine route. In addition, the Student Government sought to make shuttle stop signs so that students would know where they could wait for a safe ride. To accomplish this goal a committee was established with the following representatives: Tripp Taylor, Mindy Powers, Beth Huggins and Kay Owen. These SGA members are paired up with PC's Public Relations Office for design work and also sought to replace Hickory Hills Bar-B-Q, our past co-sponsor, with a larger corporate sponsor.

With great pride the Student Government announced and has accomplished goal. The Student Government was successful in gaining a corporate partner to help bare the burden of the printing of the shirts. Enterprise Car Rental agreed to invest fifty hundred dollars and allow us to use their slogan, "We'll Pick You Up." In addition, the Public Relations Office has worked hard to design a shuttle stop sign that is attractive and appropriate. Last week the SGA voted on various options and will vote on a finalized draft next week. Also, the Public Relations Office has come up with a new name for the Safe Ride Shuttle. From this day forward, the Safe Ride Shuttle will be known as "SCOT," which is the acronym for Student Campus Official Transport. The first route will be known as the "Blue Line," however in the future, if SCOT expands in uses, a "Green Line" or others may be added.

When the signs are printed and hung, the committee will post the specified route. SCOT will not only take you home safely, it will also pick you up from the pick up stop closest to your residence hall. To improve the use of SCOT, responsible drivers need to volunteer for service.

In addition, once these drivers have volunteered, they need to make sure that they do not back out at the last minute because many count on SCOT for the pickup. If you are interested in driving SCOT, please contact Tripp Taylor and Mindy Powers. If you decide not to use this free weekend transport, please drive responsibly and always designate a sober driver.

Video poker: crack cocaine of gambling

My Turn

Bob Ehrhardt

The political question of the hour in South Carolina is the referendum on video poker. I have been solicited to support the prohibition of video poker. It has been accurately described as the "crack cocaine" of gambling. The National Gambling Impact Study Commission recently released a report to Congress, which confirmed the moniker. It showed that video poker is the cheapest, most easily installed and most readily available form of legalized gambling. These characteristics make it a weapon easily targeted at the poor, much like crack cocaine. In effect, video poker has become a hidden tax on the poor. It entices them to play, then sucks their wallets and souls dry. A majority of the video poker addicts are the people in our society that cannot afford to waste what little money they have on their weekly fix. Bankruptcy is not the only side effect for these addicts. States that have legalized gambling, including South Carolina, suffer an increase in divorce, physical and mental problems, and crime rate. This breakdown in society may exist regardless of the presence of gambling, but the fact that people do something so damaging all day must accelerate the societal deterioration.

Gambling interests combat these obvious problems by trumpeting the benefits of gambling. They are attempting to convince the public of South Carolina that legalized gambling is producing jobs, tourist dollars and governmental revenue. These benefits are real, but not as crystal clear as advertised. The government does gross about 2.56 billion dollars in revenues produced by video poker. That revenue is the only benefit—and the net revenues are far less because South Carolina loses an estimated 425 million dollars a year due to the side effects of video poker. New jobs are created, but they are not of any quality. The lack of quality jobs produced by the gambling industry is proven by the unchanging per capita income of areas with legal gambling. People are merely shuffled around with no real improvement. There is absolutely no tourism income generated by the presence of video poker. No one with real money to gamble comes to South Carolina. No tourist plans a trip around a gas station. Tourists travel to places like Nevada and Atlantic City. In these areas gambling is a boon to the economy because of the additional industries that become involved with creating the vacation paradises. Video poker has produced nothing other than the governmental revenues. Even the money the machines make leaves the state, because 50 percent of these machines are owned by nonlocal interests.

Gambling interests are not concerned with the damage done to South Carolina. They are merely preying on the public's desire for lower taxes and the fear of losing rights. There has never been a Supreme Court precedent that tied the loss of the ability to gamble to the loss of the right to free speech or right to bear arms. The social costs that accompany video poker far outweigh the revenue the industry generates. Eventually it will become apparent that crack does in fact kill. South Carolina cannot afford the long-term costs that gambling incurs, and it must be stopped before it is too late.

Video poker: boon to S.C. economy

Video poker seems to be the next big social crusade of local politicians. The debate has erased all political and religious boundaries that separated opponents on past issues. However, this is an editorial, so I will give the readers my opinion on the debate.

As I see it, a "yes" vote will allow video poker to remain legal and invoke a new set of regulations and a tax on the industry. A "no" vote will completely outlaw video poker in the state of South Carolina. In order to write this piece, I did a little research. I found out that there will be a 25 percent tax imposed on all machine profits. This money will be distributed by the state legislature, but at this point it has not been determined how the money will be spent. A "yes" vote could potentially bring in $200 million in revenue for the state. This money could be used for education, statewide improvements or a number of other good causes. South Carolinians can even call 1-800-9-C HOOSE to tell legislators directly how they would like the money to be used. A "no" vote would generate no money for the state and could cause over 28,000 people to lose their jobs, not to mention the losses of all of the small family-owned convenience stores that could not compete with the large chain stores without the profits that video poker generates.

I understand that there is a social repercussion of video poker. People are concerned that poker machines are breaking up families and allowing children to go hungry. I am sure that this is going on, but video poker is not the only social evil that Americans face. I have yet to see a poll that determines exactly how many families have been split apart by an addiction to video poker. From my personal experience, I have rarely seen a family on welfare pull up to the local adult video gaming parlor and leave the children in the car while the parents gamble away their food stamps. On the contrary, I have seen more PC students there than any other group of people. This fact does not mean that under privileged people do not waste their money on video poker, all I'm saying is that people with a gambling addiction will fulfill their needs in other ways. They may drive to Georgia and spend their pay checks on lottery tickets, which, in turn, help educate Georgia students instead of the children of our own state. I do not believe that outlawing video poker will prevent families from breaking up or children from going hungry. Video poker has actually allowed small convenience stores to provide 401(k) plans for retirement and life insurance for their workers. It seems to me that this "industry of the devil" has done a few good things for South Carolina. I do encourage everyone to vote on November 2 and to express his or her own opinion.

Erskine student body prez addresses SGA task force

Jeremy Crisp, president of Erskine College's student government, addressed the Student Organizational Funding Task Force (S.O.F.T.) on Tuesday. Crisp explained budget practices at Erskine, where the student government controls money received from a college-imposed student activity fee. According to Jay Philpott, PC student body president, Erskine's budget practices may serve as a model for PC, which is considering possible changes to its budgeting practices.

College looking to change core curriculum in future

Finally, the curriculum would include a diversity requirement which could be fulfilled in one of three ways: either taking two international courses, studying abroad for less than one semester or studying abroad for one full semester.

"I think the diversity requirement is an excellent idea," stated sophomore Katy Tarter. "The times I have grown the most are the times I have stepped out of my culture and day to day life."

One of the chief complaints from professors is that little integration takes place between classes. According to Skinner, a biology professor recently complained that one of his students could not recall learning anything about Charles Darwin in any literature class. Unifying the liberal arts so that they relate to one another is the most important point of reform for many professors. Problems might arise, though, since these new requirements would boost the hours well over the mandatory 122 needed for graduation. Some currently required classes would have to be amended to electives, which may be very difficult for some professors to accept. With the current professor to student ratio at 13:1, PC is reluctant to hire more professors to teach these new courses unless it is a reflection of an increase in size of the student body.

The road to reform is extremely long and complicated, so much so that every student currently here will have moved on by the time anything is enacted.

"The discussion is wide open and everyone is invited to participate," said Skinner. "Thinking outside of your boundaries will be required on the part of both professors and students. Heavens! Isn't that what liberal arts education is all about?"

Russell Program begins study of "Science and the Media"

by Doodle Harris

The Presbyterian College Russell Committee inaugurated its year long study of "Science and the Media" by shooting for the stars.

Tuesday, Oct. 28th, PC welcomed two renowned scientists, David Levy and Hap McSweeney, to the campus for an "out of this world" look at fascinating discoveries of stars, comets and technology.

To start the activities, President John V. Griffith inducted McSweeney and former physics professor Dr. Neill Whitelaw into the South Carolina Hall of Science and Technology. McSweeney and Whitelaw are the fourteenth and fifteenth inductees since the Hall's establishment in 1978.

To qualify for the honor, the inductees must identify with South Carolina either by birth, residence or professional affiliation and show "major achievements as scientists or technologists [and] significant contributions to understanding and appreciation of science, technology, social sciences, the humanities, and their interrelationships" as stated by the South Carolina Science Council.

McSweeney, a native of Clinton, currently serves as professor and chairman of the department of geological sciences for the University of Tennessee, and he has co-authored numerous books and articles concerning the geology of Mars, meteors and asteroids.

Whitelaw served as professor of mathematics and physics at PC for 32 years and inspired students, including former student Tom Whitaker, to pursue their aspirations in the sciences.

"Dr. Whitelaw, without question, accepted nothing but the highest scholarly attainment and was, without a doubt, one of the hardest and toughest professors on campus," said Whitaker, a 1966 PC graduate. "In the classroom and laboratory, he inspired me to achieve my very best. He did this not only by his remarkable intelligence, analytical thought and knowledge of physics, but because of his physical limitations."

Whitelaw suffered from severe arthritis prior to his death in 1968. In memory and respect for the professor, PC endowed the auditorium in Richardson Science building with his name. PC chemistry professor emeritus Dr. Nolan Carter accepted the award for his former colleague.

The first CEP of the day and actual kick-off for the Russell Program was Levy's talk and slideshow concerning his discovery or co-discovery of 21 comets in our solar system including Shoemaker-Levy 9 which crashed into Jupiter during July of 1994. Levy has written over 18 books about comets and astronomy and has contributed to and edited articles for "Parade" magazine and Discovery Channel specials. Adding to the hype of his discoveries is Levy's lack of professional training in astronomy. With a B.A. and master's degree in English literature, his only formal introduction to the stars was "ten minutes in the fourth grade."

Levy's comet comments included his frustration with various national media's lack of enthusiasm about his discoveries.

"When we discovered the comet, the story was on page 21 of the New York Times," Levy said. "Page 21."

When the day for the cosmic collision arrived, "Levy said, 'a reporter from CNN met us and said 'This is an exciting event isn't it?' I hope so because we're broadcasting live around the world.' At that point we were looking for a flat rock to crawl under."

Afternoon activities included speaker McSweeney and multiple demonstrations with a duplication of the Mars Rover, a contraption built by NASA to examine the topography of Mars. According to McSweeney, studying the Mars terrain is essential because Mars is the most Earthlike planet in solar system. The Rover was especially exciting because, instead of merely orbiting Mars, it actually landed on the surface.

When PC first asked to borrow the Rover, NASA declined. The Rover is so rare and expensive, McSweeney personally had to convince NASA to extend the privilege to PC.

Although PC students attended somewhat sparsely and were reluctant to comment on the day's activities, local elementary school, middle school and high school students arrived in droves to participate in the activities.

The speeches and induction ceremony are "not so much a recognition of individual achievement as a recognition that our community, South Carolina, can nurture a young scientist to reach for the stars," McSweeney said.

"The lasting result of the Mars Pathfinder and probably the Global Surveyor will not necessarily be scientific and engineering. We do learn, but the greatest effect is on our children. Technology can be thrilling, science can be fun."

Afternoon activities included speaker McSweeney and multiple demonstrations with a duplication of the Mars Rover, a

Riddle displays leadership on campus, in community

by Kathryn Mehl
Staff Writer

This month's senior spotlight goes to Bryan Reid Riddle. His family consists of his parents, John and Angie, and a younger brother, John, Jr.

Riddle lists his favorite food as the number one Value Meal at Burger King. Brian's hobbies include playing the guitar, hunting, watching movies and "straight chilling." Brian is from Irmo, S.C.

"I am leaning towards a major in accounting," Riddle said, when asked about his future plans. "After that, I'd like to go to graduate school and get a masters in accounting."

Riddle has been involved in several extracurricular activities during his stay at Presbyterian College. He has been a member of Campus Outreach, where he often participates in skits and music stylings. During his sophomore year, Riddle was a representative in student government and participated in student legislature. He has also served as a resident assistant for two years, and he has been a member of the Multicultural Student Union, serving as treasurer his junior year. Riddle was also on the finance committee and has worked on the Laurens County Literacy Council for three years.

One of the most distinguished positions Riddle has held was in the strategic planning process for PC. Both Laura Keely (Class of '99) and Riddle represented the student body in this program that was designed to hypothesize what PC would look like in the year 2010.

"I learned a lot about how much our school has impacted the world," said Riddle of his experience. "It was very exciting to see."

Riddle has had other exciting experiences besides his involvement in strategic planning associated with PC.

"The most significant thing that has happened to me while I have been at PC has been my decision to accept Christ right after my freshman year," said Riddle. "Christ is my foundation, and through that I find fulfillment, security and the assurance that I could only have in that relationship."

For two summers Brian has gone to Summer Beach Project. SBP is similar to a Christian camp, but the students are all involved in Campus Outreach, and their lodging for their two-month stay is a hotel in Myrtle Beach. All the participating students have to work 40 hours a week, and after hours they go to Christian-based programs.

"I liked it a lot," said Riddle. "While I was there, I learned how to grow in my relationship with Christ. I also learned how to minister to people more effectively."

This past summer Brian went to Mexico to be a student missionary on a college campus there.

"I think I would really like to go and minister in South America after I get through with graduate school," he said.

Wilhite brings fresh ideas, excitement to her duties

by Terri Helfrey
Staff Writer

She's always on the move, always going from here to there, always has something to do, always has someone to meet with, always has something to do and yet when you pause Kaci Wilhite on the sidewalks of the PC campus, never will one find her without one important attribute: a disarming smile.

Wilhite's effervescent smile is just the beginning of this special lady. Officially she bears two titles: graduate assistant for Leadership PC and resident director of Belk Hall, two titles that denote a great deal of responsibility.

It would seem Kaci has quite a lot on her hands: her feet, her head, her everything. However, not only is Wilhite a staff member here at PC, she is also a graduate student at the University of South Carolina.

Though one would never know it because Kaci always seems so put together, she reports that it's been hard to get back into a regimen, "back into the swing of things," after having been out of school for three years.

Wilhite said that she feels less as though she can most certainly identify with the freshmen women she lives with, learning how to manage time more efficiently, and "figuring it out."

Having spent the last few years in the rural town of Clifton, Ga., Wilhite said that even Clifton seems comparatively minuscule, after all, and Belk Hall is open past 8:00 p.m.

Now in the big town of Clinton, Wilhite also has some big things planned for this year.

on the PC campus. As the RD of Belk Hall, Kaci wants to see the residence halls become "more of a center of activity." These "communities" we've in called residence halls "can be used more efficiently," Kaci said. In accordance with that theme, Wilhite's other major goals for this campus are centered on efficiency, as well.

She believes that if there were anything she could change about this campus, it would include more efficient use of resources available here at PC.

She knows that there are so many talented faculty here, and many of them are not being sought out for their multitude of abilities and wealth of knowledge. Aside from more efficient use of faculty, Kaci would also like to see PC utilize the wealth of diversity that this town, this state and this country have to offer. Kaci believes that with the inclusion of more minorities and different types of people, PC's vitality would be richer and the campus could have even more to offer.

On the other hand, aside from all of her big plans, Wilhite has also had to make some big adjustments in living quarters. From living on her own for three years, to moving in with more than 300 freshmen girls, Wilhite has me to be a better student!" To say the least, Kaci loves her Belk ladies and her position as Resident Director. And it seems that the feelings are mutual. When asked her impression of Kaci, Kaci Duncan, freshman Belk Resident, simply said "I think she's cool!" Personally, after having gotten to know Kaci through my interview, I have to wholeheartedly agree with the simple fact that she is definitely a "cool" lady with so much to offer.

And so, how could an article spotlighting the lovely Miss Wilhite be complete without the lowdown on all the fun stuff she likes to do in her spare time (as if she had any!). Basically, you have to love a woman whose favorite television show is "Party of Five" but who's willing to tape it to judge the Diversity Week Talent Show as she did two weeks ago. And from that simple action it seems easy to note that watching movies and playing the piano are two of her favorite extra-curriculars.

In her roles as assistant for Leadership PC, RD of Belk Hall, friend, confidant, and authority figure, Kaci seems to be making waves all over the PC campus. When asked if there were five words that seemed to encompass her nature, Kaci replied, "friendly, enthusiastic, jovial, dedicated and perseverant." As a "lady of Belk" and a person who got to know Kaci through this interview, I would most assuredly agree with all of those descriptors. However, I would also add "real" to that list. There is nothing fake about Kaci Wilhite, and that seems a rare commodity in today's society. It would be a wise decision to utilize this lady as a valuable resource and use her talents most efficiently.

English Department, "Figs and Thistles" bring accomplished poets to campus

by Ryan Magee
Staff Writer

The English Department and "Figs and Thistles" co-sponsored three poetry readings to take place at PC this academic year. Claire Bateman, Ricks Carson, and Judy Goldman come to PC this year to read their poetry. Bateman has already appeared at school but Carson and Goldman still must make their appearance.

Bateman, who read September 20, is a very accomplished poet. Her awards consist of the Louisiana Literature Poetry Prize, the Brittingham Prize for Poetry, the New Millennium Writings Poetry Award, and she was a finalist of the Walt Whitman Award. Her poetry earned her grants from the National Endowment of the Arts and the Tennessee State Arts Commission. She has three books of poetry published which include: "The Bicycle Slowrace" (1991), "At the Funeral of Ether" (1998), and "Friction" (1998).

"Claire Bateman is a funny and intellectual poet whose works appeal to a wide range of ages," said Dr. Nancy McCabe. "Bateman's poetry reading was captivating and enthralling," said Freshmen Chris Campbell.

Ricks Carson appears November 8 at the Chapman Conference Center. Carson is a very respected poet whose works have appeared in more than fifteen magazines, which include Chattahoochee Review, Kansas Quarterly, Catalyst, Descant, The Village Writer, and The Explicator. He placed first in the Red Mountain Rendez-vous National Competition and placed four times in the John David Johnson National Poetry Competition.

"Carson is very accessible but different than Bateman. In his works he focuses on nature, so they appear more earthy to the reader," said McCabe.

Judy Goldman, a Jewish poet and fiction writer, resides in North Carolina. Her reading on February 17 at the Chapman Conference Center may consist of poetry, fiction, or even creative non-fiction.

"Goldman is interesting because she works in a variety of genres," said McCabe.

Goldman uses some of the ideas from her poetry in her recently published novel "The Slow Way Back." She said she feels as though she plagiarized from herself because of the closely linked ideas in her poetry and novel. She is also an esteemed poet who has published two books. She titled the books "Holding Back Winter" and "Wanting to Know the End." Some of her poems and essays have been published in literary journals and magazines, such as "Southern Review" and "Kenyon Review." Her awards include the Roanoke-Chowan Award for poetry, Zoe Kincaid Brockman Prize, Oscar Arnold Young Book Prize, Gerald Cable Poetry Award, and the Fortner Writer and Community Award. She used to teach at Queens College, but she now teaches at Duke University Writers' Workshop and at other writers' conferences throughout the Southeast.

Blue Hose football continues to fight

by Jack Carmody
Staff Writer

After coming off two heartbreaking losses to Carson-Newman and Lenoir-Rhyne, PC was looking to get back on track against the Pioneers of Tusculum. They got back on track all right, and in record breaking fashion.

It took a mere 27 seconds for PC to ring up its first score, a 71-yard bomb from sophomore Todd Cunningham to tight end Robbie Cato. Tusculum answered with two TD's of their own. From there, however, the PC defense tightened up. Cunningham hit junior standout Travis Smith for a 14-yard score with 5:07 to go in the half. On Tusculum's next possession, they fumbled and PC free safety Michael Scamavacca recovered it on the Tusculum 11. On the following play, Cunningham rifled the ball to senior wideout Brad Boleman for an 11-yard score. Tusculum fumbled the ball again on their next possession, giving PC prime field position. It didn't take long for Cunningham to find Travis Smith in the endzone for the 22-yard score.

It did not get any prettier for the Pioneers in the second half. They fumbled the ball again, and senior defensive end Jamie Tyler was there to recover it on the Tusculum 15 yard line. Again Cunningham threw his fifth touchdown pass to sophomore wide receiver Kevie Smith. PC was not done yet. While pinned in their own endzone, Tusculum's quarterback was called for intentional grounding as he was being sacked by strong safety Michael Brooks. Tusculum scored for the third time with 5:18 to go in the third quarter. However, Travis Smith ran the kickoff back 89 yards for another Blue Hose touchdown. PC's final score came on a 44-yard pass from Cunningham to Kevin Smith.

Cunningham was 14-23 for 249 yards and 6 TD's on the day. His six touchdowns equalled his own PC single game record, while they also made him the new all-time career touchdown passing leader. Travis Smith also broke the career touchdown reception record with his twenty-fourth TD. The two's performances earned both Cunningham and Smith the right to call themselves SAC Pepsi Football Players of the week. Smith was also named Co-Special Teams National Player of the week for his kickoff return efforts against Tusculum.

For their next game the Hose traveled to Salisbury, N.C. to take on Catawba. For the first time this season, PC was blanked in the first half and entered the lockerroom down 14-0. PC finally got on the board with 3:31 left in the third quarter when Ben Creaman blocked a punt, which was then recovered by Kevie Smith in the endzone for the score. PC's only other points came on a John Redding 32-yard field goal early in the fourth quarter. One bright spot for PC was senior wide receiver Brad Boleman, who had nine catches for 83 yards. Todd Cunningham completed 21 passes for 190 yards, but was also picked off twice.

PC will play their third home game of the season tomorrow when the University of Virginia at Wise comes to town.

USC-Aiken takes first-round lead in PC Intercollegiate golf tourney

USC-Aiken shot a first round 291 led by junior Mikael Mustonen (1 ahti, Finland) one under-par 71 to take a one stroke lead after the first round of the Presbyterian College Intercollegiate held October 11 at Musgrove Mill Golf Course.

The Pacers hold a one-stroke advantage over Rollins College, while Pfeiffer University is two strokes off the lead with a first round score of 293. Host Presbyterian College shot a first round 309, which ties the Blue Hose for tenth place with South Atlantic Conference rivals Wingate University and Tusculum College.

Rollins senior golfer Stefano Mario LeCannet, France, shot a three-under-par 69 to lead the individual honors. UNC Pembroke's Brian Smith, and PC's senior Russ Padgett (Cheraw, S.C.) are one stroke off the individual lead with a first-round 70.

The final round was held October 12. As of press time, no other stats were available. For further information on the tourney, please see the next issue of the "Blue Stocking."

Men's soccer team ranked #8 in nation

Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

With the SAC tournament less than a month away, the PC men's soccer team has been improving their skills in games against SAC teams. According to the latest NSCAA/Adidas Men's NCAA Division II national rankings, the team is ranked eighth in the nation and #1 in the Southeast Region. The Blue Hose are the only team currently ranked in the SAC, in the top 25 in the nation except Gardner-Webb University, ranked twenty-second. The PC team has had an outstanding season so far this year, winning nine out of ten of their regular season games and maintaining a 5-1 record in the conference. Gardner Webb is the only squad who have been able to touch the Blue Hose's impeccable record. Since this game, the Blue Hose have come back strong, winning their last four games, all against SAC teams.

I think that the success of this season thus far can be traced to our dedication to hard work on the practice field and strong team unity off the field. We know what we have a chance to do this season, and this has been the driving force behind our team. We're glad to be back in control of the conference again and are ready to face Gardner-Webb again at the conference tournament," said sophomore defender Nick Hagler.

The men's soccer team has risen to victory in the past two games against conference opponents. On October 3, PC faced Lenoir-Rhyne. This conference opponent had previously beaten USC Spartanburg 2-1, so the team was prepared for the tough competition that Lenoir-Rhyne was going to show them. Putting the Blue Hose at a greater disadvantage, the game was played in Hickory, N.C., the home of Lenoir-Rhyne. However, PC jumped to an early lead in the fourteenth minute of the first half when forward Drew Stephen, a senior, scored off an assist by junior defender Tommy Wollenburger. After this goal, both teams held the other team out of the goal with good defense on both sides. PC shot on the goal 13 times throughout the game while Lenoir-Rhyne tried to sink a goal a respectable seven times, none getting past Blue Hose goalkeeper Andy Pfaff. PC scored one final time to ensure a 2-0 victory in the final minutes of the game with a goal from senior midfielder Daniel Hanks.

PC also blew away Newberry's team on their home turf on October 6th with a 7-0 victory over the Indians. With an attacking offense, the Blue Hose attempted 17 shots on the goal, scoring seven times. The action began early in the game with a header by sophomore midfielder Jeff Hendrix with an assist from senior Tommy Wollenburger. The team was on a role, when later in the game, they rallied three goals in an 11 minute span by scorers Daniel Hanks, Sean Warren and Tommy Wollenburger. The goals just kept on coming second half with shots by Nick Goan, Erik Anderson and Jason Prince.

Abig game against USC Spartanburg was rained out on Saturday, Oct. 10 and was rescheduled for Oct. 25. PC has six more games, two of which are conference matches, before the SAC Tournament, which starts Nov. 2.

Women's soccer wins final home game, ranked fifth in nation

by Scott Moore
Staff Writer

On Oct. 4, 1999, Presbyterian College women's soccer was ranked #5 in the nation on the last list put out by the NSCAA/Adidas Women's NCAA Division II National Ranking Committee. The Blue Hose are now 10-0-0 overall and 6-0-0 in the South Atlantic Conference regular season after shutting out Wingate University last week 6-0. The team also defeated Mars Hill, 6-0, and Francis Marion, 4-0. These wins keep the Lady Blue Hose soccer team on top of the Southeast region.

"I couldn't be more pleased by the team," said Coach Brian Purcell. "They have exceeded all my expectations, but they need to finish strong. Being consistent and playing well are keys."

The win against Wingate University was the result of two goals in the first half by freshman forward Jessi Adair, who scored the first goal before the first nine minutes of the game were expired. Adair's second goal came near the end of the first half. Senior forward Karen Markham scored two goals in the second half of the game. Markham's first goal came off a corner kick, and the second was off a cross from Ashley Davies. Lucy Evans and Ashley Leipelt also scored a goal each. Evans scored off a cross from Jamie Harris, and Leipelt's score came from a Christina Ball cross near the end of the second half, which put the Lady Blue Hose ahead 6-0.

The Blue Hose outshot the Wingate Bulldogs 30-1 and increased their scoring margin to 41-1. The Blue Hose game on Sunday against Longwood University was canceled due to the weather, and the match will not be rescheduled. Tuesday the team played against Queens College on the Pondo for the last home game of the season. The Lady Blue Hose won 4-0 with goals by Michelle Spangler, Ashley Davies, Jamie Harris and Jessi Adair. As of press time, no other stats were available.

Tonight the Lady Blue Hose will play Erskine at 7:00. The other final three games of the season will also be played on the road against Newberry on Thursday, Oct. 21, Lander on Sunday, Oct. 24 and Catawba on Saturday, Oct. 30.

"The game against Catawba is really big because they are also being considered for a bid to go to a national tournament," said Purcell.

world in senior men's singles. Morris is a member of four different Tennis Halls of Fame in the Southeast.

While playing tennis, Morris also worked his way up through the textile industry. He eventually became the vice president of personnel for a large textile company in North Carolina. After working in the private sector, Morris then took the job of Head Men's Tennis Coach and Director of Tennis Operations at the University of North Carolina - Chapel Hill. He continued to coach at UNC for thirty years. Morris won several awards while at UNC and led his men's tennis team to two ACC Championships, and PC honored Morris for his remarkable coaching achievements in 1992 with the Bob Waters Award, which is awarded to outstanding alumni coaches.

In 1993, Allen Morris returned to his alma mater and served one year as the director of the Scotsman Club, PC's athletic fundraising organization. The next year he replaced Cally Gault as the Athletic Director in charge of all Presbyterian College sports programs. This year will be Morris' fifth and final year leading Blue Hose Athletics.

"I consider it a real honor to have had the opportunity to come back to PC as the Athletic Director," said Morris.

Under Morris' leadership the PC athletic department has won two back-to-back South Atlantic Conference Athletic Excellence Awards, the award given annually to the top overall athletic program in the conference. Blue Hose sports teams have also won twenty-six SAC conference championships, received twenty-three berths to the NCAA Division II National Championships, and seventeen SAC Coaches of the Year Awards with Morris' direction.

Morris has also aided in the hiring of new coaches, overseen the development of the new softball complex, led the planning for the new football and soccer stadiums, and helped increase funding for women's athletic scholarships.

PC will conduct a national search at the end of this year for a new athletic director.

Freshmen express concern about ping-pong, sprinklers, lack of sleep

by Doug Belknap and
Chad Goodwin

So another year at PC begins. Many are back now for their second, third or fourth year, and a few select students are making a fifth appearance, but the rest of us are new—we are freshmen. I would say I speak for most of the freshmen when I say that the first impression has been a good, albeit difficult, one. Classes are probably harder here for most than at high school, and I can assure you that trying to remember when classes meet is more difficult for everyone. However, the academic aspect of PC is not my concern here. Hopefully with time this will be straightened out and everything will fall into place. The issue that most needs addressing is the social aspect of life at PC: a freshman perspective.

As I grow more and more accustomed to the way of life at PC, I find that I have more and more free time during which I can basically just play. Now the nights are generally taken care of. There will no doubt be a party somewhere at any time of the night on campus; however, I will touch on this later. The daytime, on the other hand, offers a number of activities for the average Joe like myself. Thus far in my daily pursuit of pleasure, I have attempted frisbee golf and water polo; I have frequented the basketball and tennis courts and I have found a second home of sorts on the ping-pong tables. Now here is where I'd like to pause. I may be just a freshman, with little PC experience, but I know for a fact that a few people (and when I say few I mean the majority of the school) other than me play ping-pong. There is ONE ping-pong table in Springs. This doesn't add up. The outcry is getting louder, the people are getting restless, soon the masses will rise up and... well perhaps I'm getting ahead of myself here. At any rate, I think it is safe to say a ping-pong table or three would be a good investment.

And while I am on the subject of smart investments, for the love of money, fix the volleyball court. How much longer do we need to be taunted by the potentially beautiful sand court that is instead scattered with mile deep holes and trailer park sand? Do us all a favor and fix it up.

Now perhaps an argument against these seemingly insignificant items is the money issue. I agree that something along the lines of a bowling alley might be a bit too pricey for the school budget, but all we're asking for is a few hundred dollars. Now about the school budget, let's work this out. I pay around $20,000 a year. We'll give $2,000 to the teachers, $3,000 to the dining hall—about which I have only good things to say, I might add—and $5,000 to the upkeep of dorms. Now understanding that these terms aren't exactly accurate (but we'll assume they're close), that means of my $20,000 I have spent $10,000. Where did the rest go? I will tell you. I have figured it out (again these figures aren't precise) and as near as I can get it, each student is paying roughly $10,000 a year to water PC's lawn. That can't be accurate, you're probably thinking; but let me ask you this: how many of you have to dodge the sprinklers to get to any building at any time of the day, even night, around PC's campus? How many of you have witnessed that strange phenomenon in which PC tries to outdo a hurricane and water the lawns amidst a torrential downpour? How many of you have noticed that the ducks are no longer confined to the small pond near GDH, but instead have free rein over the entire campus? If you answered yes to two or more of these questions, then you realize my point. Not only is the watering situation sucking our money supply away, but it is also starting to affect our daily lives, as well. In the recent freshman elections, a bright young student by the name of Chen Lu was making a very impressive showing, that is until those blasted sprinklers wiped out her sidewalk chalk and put an unrecoverable dent in her campaign.

A closing remark to the sprinkler debate is that it has been rumored that some of the maintenance crew were overheard to have said, "I don't understand it; we mow the lawns on Tuesday and then by Thursday it's a blessed jungle again. When will it end?"

So if reasons for the lack of entertainment is money, I think I have the answer. For the sake of the students and that of the maintenance crew, do us all a favor and give the grass a rest. I can almost assure you that just one day away from the intense watering schedule will more than suffice for a couple of ping-pong tables and enough sand for five courts, plus it will give the maintenance crew a well-deserved rest.

Now to the next and final issue of concern—the party scene. I'm sure every freshman was ecstatic to discover that Presburyan College, unbeknownst to most, is a haven for drinkards. Who would have thought that in the little town of Clinton, there could be such an abundant amount of alcohol? The consumption of alcohol by the PC community is single-handedly responsible for economically supporting the townsfolk of Clinton.

However, I digress, because for most college kids this is a fact that is celebrated and that is definitely not my issue of concern. No, my problem with the party scene is the scheduling of it all. Now I get just as excited as the next guy about a band playing at one of the various frat houses, but a guy has his limits. I'll be honest with you. I'm glad I don't have anyone to tell me what time I have to go to bed, but if I make it a habit to stay out past three every night, pretty soon I no longer function and am able only to lie in bed wondering why I find myself always tired and out of energy. As every PC student knows, if I try to be in my room by 3:00 a.m., that means that I get to party with a good number of people for about thirty minutes. I am constantly amazed that the parties don't get into full swing until the a.m. hours, and I'm not the only one.

Christina Davis told me that she believes she is becoming nocturnal in order to keep up with PC's partying demands.

"I'm like a bat," she said.

In defense of the parties themselves, they generally aren't that bad, it's just that by starting that late, many people don't come. So take my advice and that of others and let's start the activities before the a.m. hours. More people will be inclined to come, and we will be able to stay out at the houses for three or four hours without missing breakfast.

So to recap, what I have to say is minor, but important to some, if not most, of the PC community. Let's start spending money on something other than the purely aesthetic side of campus by not watering the lawns. And to you kids out there: I know some think it's the cool thing to do to party at all hours of the night, but let's start the parties earlier so that we can for once appreciate that little voice in our heads telling us to get more sleep. I speak not of our conscience, but of our common sense.

Freshmen express concern about ping-pong, sprinklers, lack of sleep

by Doug Belknap and
Chad Goodwin

So another year at PC begins. Many are back now for their second, third or fourth year, and a few select students are making a fifth appearance, but the rest of us are new—we are freshmen. I would say I speak for most of the freshmen when I say that the first impression has been a good, albeit difficult, one. Classes are probably harder here for most than at high school, and I can assure you that trying to remember when classes meet is more difficult for everyone. However, the academic aspect of PC is not my concern here. Hopefully with time this will be straightened out and everything will fall into place. The issue that most needs addressing is the social aspect of life at PC: a freshman perspective.

As I grow more and more accustomed to the way of life at PC, I find that I have more and more free time during which I can basically just play. Now the nights are generally taken care of. There will no doubt be a party somewhere at any time of the night on campus; however, I will touch on this later. The daytime, on the other hand, offers a number of activities for the average Joe like myself. Thus far in my daily pursuit of pleasure, I have attempted frisbee golf and water polo, I have frequented the basketball and tennis courts and I have found a second home of sorts on the ping-pong tables. Now here is where I'd like to pause. I may be just a freshman, with little PC experience, but I know for a fact that a few people (and when I say a few I mean the majority of the school) other than me play ping-pong. There is ONE ping-pong table in Springs. This doesn't add up. The outcry is getting louder, the people are getting restless, soon the masses will rise up and . . . well perhaps I'm getting ahead of myself here. At any rate, I think it is safe to say a ping-pong table or three would be a good investment.

And while I am on the subject of smart investments, for the love of money, fix the volleyball court. How much longer do we need to be haunted by the potentially beautiful sand court that is instead scattered with mile deep holes and trailer park sand? Do us all a favor and fix it up.

Now perhaps an argument against these seemingly insigninificant items is the money issue. I agree that something along the lines of a bowling alley might be a bit too pricey for the school budget, but all we're asking for is a few hundred dollars. Now about the school budget, let's work this out. I pay around $20,000 a year. We'll give $2,000 to the teachers, $3,000 to the dining hall—about which I have only good things to say, I might add—and $5,000 to the upkeep of dorms. Now understanding that these terms aren't exactly accurate (but we'll assume they're close), that means of my $20,000 I have spent $10,000. Where did the rest go? I will tell you. I have figured it out (again these figures aren't precise) and as near as I can get it, each student is paying roughly $10,000 a year to water PC's lawn. That can't be accurate, you're probably thinking, but let me ask you this: how many of you have to dodge the sprinklers to get to any building at any time of the day, even night, around PC's campus? How many of you have witnessed that strange phenomenon in which PC tries to outdo a hurricane and water the lawns amidst a torrential downpour? How many of you have noticed that the ducks are no longer confined to the small pond near GDH, but instead have free rein over the entire campus? If you answered yes to two or more of these questions, then you realize my point. Not only is the watering situation sucking our money supply away, but it is also starting to affect our daily lives, as well. In the recent freshman elections, a bright young student by the name of Chen Lu was making a very impressive showing, that is until those blasted sprinklers wiped out her sidewalk chalk and put an unrecoverable dent in her campaign.

A closing remark to the sprinkler debate is that it has been rumored that some of the maintenance crew were overheard to have said, "I don't understand it; we mow the lawns on Tuesday and then by Thursday it's a blessed jungle again. When will it end?"

College to adopt new policy for funding student organizations

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

On Friday, Oct. 15, as students packed their bags and left campus for Fall Break, members of the Presbyterian College budget committee met to consider a topic of great importance to students—student organizational funding.

The committee considered a student-government-endorsed proposal to give students greater say in how student organizations are funded. While the committee members did not endorse the SGA proposal fully, they did endorse the overall concept of the proposal and recommended some changes to student organizational funding policies, according to Jay Philpott, student body president.

"The President and I did agree that the concept was good," said Morris Galloway, acting vice-president of finance and administration. "I think we can move toward what the SGA is wanting. It just may take a few years to get there."

If the College's budget is approved by the Board of Trustees, money from a 5-10 percent increase in the general fee next academic year will be given to student organizations to help supplement their already-existing budgets. Specifically, $25 that each student pays through the general fee will be earmarked specifically for student activities. This money will then be allocated to student organizations by a finance committee composed of student leaders and administrators.

Dr. Peter Hobbie, associate professor of religion and member of the Student Organizational Funding Task Force (SOFT), noted that, although this plan calls for an increase in the amount of fees charged to students, that increase would have occurred even if students had not lobbied for more funds.

"We need to be clear—this is not an increase that would not have occurred if Jay had not asked for it," said Hobbie.

"In other words, it's just a part of the tuition increase that was going to happen anyway. What Jay has asked is that $25 of that [increase] be designated for this purpose."

According to Philpott, members of the student government and SOFT had difficulty in preparing a proposal for the budget committee because they were notified of the deadline for a proposal only a week and a half before the committee met.

"That did not give us enough time to fully get our plans together," said Philpott. "Therefore, we had to scramble very quickly to get it done on time." However, the Student Organizational Funding Task Force, otherwise known as SOFT, busted tail and came up with three different options."

The first option, according to Philpott, would make no changes to the current system. Currently, 1,067 students pay for student activities through the general fee, which is used to fund everything from power bills to student organizations. The College allocates the money acquired from this fee to College departments, which, in turn, allocate money to student organizations. The College budgeted approximately $142,000 to 15 student organizations, including the "Blue Stocking," for fiscal year 2000. Assuming that the $142,000 allocated for student activities comes only from the general fee, each of the

How the new plan will affect students:

*Current organizational budgets will remain the same

*Student fees will increase 5-10% for the 2000-2001 academic year

*$25 that each student pays through the general fee will be earmarked specifically for student activities

*Money collected through this student activity fee will be controlled by a Student Government Finance Committee, which will include SGA members, faculty and administrators.

1,067 students who currently pay the general fee pay $133.08 for student activities.

Maintaining the current system, said Philpott, assumes that everyone is happy with a system that is essentially based upon "taxation without representation."

The second option would make no increase in student fees but would collect all funds used for student activities into one pot. A Student Government Finance Committee (SGFC), which would include students, faculty and administrators, would oversee the money in this pot. Student organizations would then apply to the SGFC for their yearly budgets. This system, said Philpott, would allow for an increase in student activities proportional to an increase in student enrollment, since funding would come directly from student fees.

POINT

College should offer more performance CEPs that do not require admission fees

Money seems to be the big issue on campus right now. By this point in the semester, many students are probably realizing that they have less of it in their wallets than they did two months ago—a fact that probably explains why Parents' Weekend has been scheduled for this weekend. Furthermore, the Student Government Association/Student Organizational Funding Committee's proposal to increase College funding for student activities is also generating some discussion of money.

But one very important monetary issue seems to have been overlooked—ticket prices for performance CEPs.

So far this semester, five performance CEPs out of the eleven held have required students to purchase a ticket to attend the event. Furthermore, five of the six events that did not require purchasing a ticket were scheduled for Tuesday evening—a time that conflicts with the schedules of almost half the College's student population (i.e. students whose fraternity or sorority meet on Tuesday night).

We at the "Blue Stocking" recognize that top-rate performers cost the College a considerable amount of money; and we are certainly proud of the high quality performances held on campus. We recognize further that money is not an issue for many PC students. But we also recognize that not all PC students fit the "rich" stereotype. Many students, in fact, work one or more jobs to pay for their living expenses at College. To such students, CEP ticket prices pose an undue financial burden.

Therefore, since money is, in fact, an issue of concern to some students; and since attendance at CEPs is required for graduation; and since, as a requirement for graduation, CEPs constitute an academic event that should technically be funded through tuition, we urge the College to hold more performance events that do not cost a price for admission.

Student body president comments on Springs parking, organizational funding, computer lab use Exciting progress has been made over the past two weeks. The Student Organizational Funding Task Force turned in a proposal to increase the funds available to student organizations. Several of the concepts of the proposal were endorsed, and more details will be available as November concludes. The administrators, faculty and students participating on this task force have worked hard, however, the task force has more work to do.

The newly remodeled and redesigned canteen opened. Everyone seems to be enjoying the Starbucks coffee and the other new menu items. Parking outside Springs will also improve this week, as many of the spaces become thirty-minute spaces. This will enable students to more easily check their mail and order food from the new canteen. Zach Braden, Katie Dobbins and Sara Brailsford were the SGA members that worked to make these increased spaces a reality. In addition, Public Safety, Mr.

Galloway and Bryan Madden provided much needed guidance.

Liz Woods, Tracy Koon and Ryan Reese, SGA's technology committee, have worked with several administrators and a faculty member to enable a computer lab to be open twenty-four hours, several days a week. Public Safety will be putting the final touches on the lab this week so that several safety features will be available. As students we need to take care of the lab so that it can continue to remain open. This will be an exciting feature and one to show-off when you are showing the campus to prospective students on tours.

Please enjoy Parents' Weekend and be sure to show your parents all of the exciting improvements in your residence halls and in the eating facilities. Good luck in all your classes, and please speak to anyone on SGA if there is something we can do to help you resolve your concerns. We have enjoyed working with you this fall.

As the millennium approaches, people around the world are preparing for the new age, a time where people will be connected to each other through the technology of the internet and worldwide web. The hope is that in the year 2000, a new "Global Village" will emerge, and all people will embrace the concepts of community that this "Global Village" represents.

Even here in Clinton, S.C., we the people of Presbyterian College do not go unaffected by these concepts of community. Dr. Griffith addressed these issues at opening convocation, asserting the importance of facilitating the worldwide community of the "Global Village." Also, a group on campus, of which I am a part, called Project Understanding has been looking into the issues of diversity at PC. In the process, Project Understanding has tried to include a plan that would provide the vision and rules to govern the College's pursuit of diversity and that would be included in the College's strategic planning process. However, the development of a diversity component in the strategic plan is on hold until a diversity consultant can give an assessment of the role diversity already plays on campus.

Now, in recent weeks, I have heard rumors that diversity is not as hot an issue at PC as the members of Project Understanding believe. I have also heard that people are simply sick and tired of hearing about diversity, and that at a place like PC where everybody knows each other and pretty much gets along, differences between races, genders, religious groups, Greeks and non-Greeks and people of different social backgrounds are not problems.

I can see where this attitude comes from, because, let's face it, the issues of race, gender or other differences are not things that confront us on a regular basis. I think this is due mainly to the fact that many of us, including myself, probably spend time with people who, for the most part, look, talk and act in the exact same way we do. I don't think that there is anything wrong with that, people need to spend time with others who share the same interest and habits as they.

But a problem does exist when, in our blindness of good feelings over finding people who are similar to us, we ignore or deride what we see as being different from us. And in our ignorance and denial, we close off the concept of diversity within our community, preferring to say that there are no problems in our "PC Bubble." I disagree with this assessment.

When, according to the Presbyterian College's Data Book, only 4.5% of enrolled students in 1998 were students of color there is a problem. When less than half of the number of African American students that were accepted for the 1998 academic year actually enrolled, there is a problem. When, according to Sheila Hill, assistant dean of student life, multicultural and volunteer services, over the course of thirty years of admitting African American students, there are 144 African American alumni (average of less than 5 African American graduates a year), there is a problem. When an African American student's requests for racially diverse movies for PC Cinema are ignored, there is a problem. When, I, a white student, am taking a class load of thirteen hours and realize that of my some thirty fellow students in those classes only one is not a white student, there is a problem.

However, the issue of race and how we handle it is not the only problem of diversity we face at PC. Two weekends ago, there were a number of girls seriously hurt by the process of sorority rush. That same week, the Newman Club, the Catholic student group, expressed in their weekly meeting that they felt isolated and unknown by the majority of the campus. The rumors that have been heard that diversity is an out of date topic reflects that at least a part of the community is unaware that the promotion of diversity is an initiative of the College's administration for the '99-'00 year and is also unaware that Project Understanding even exists. This is perhaps the biggest problem our community faces.

My Turn

But why are these things a problem? I think they are problems because they reflect an ignorance and intolerance of the diversity that our community possesses. I think the problems also reflect an unwillingness to go beyond our PC bubble—these problems make it hard to connect with, learn with and grow with those that have different experiences and ideas than our own immediate circle. In the process our bubble becomes hardened and we reject the concepts of community that we first expressed through a term like the "Global Village."

In some ways, we are all responsible for the neglect of diversity within our community. At one time or another, I think we have all failed to look outside our own circles and appreciate those who are different; we have been intolerant of those with whom we do not agree. I know I have. But more important than assigning blame in this matter, is recognizing that a unique challenge and opportunity faces us. Just as the problems we face exist in our community, the answers to those problems exist in our community.

We can solve our problems and even burst out of our PC bubble, but only if we begin to urgently send the message that diversity and inclusion are important elements for a truly happy community, and only if we swallow our pride and fear to admit that we even have a problem facing us.

To that end, Project Understanding will bring Dr. Arthur C. Jones, senior clinical professor of psychology at the University of Denver, to address the issues of diversity our community faces. This address will occur on Tuesday, November 16th, at the convocation hour. In addition, Project Understanding will sponsor both a period of reflection over Jones' comments immediately following the convocation and a PC "Town Meeting" where members of our community can express their concerns about diversity and community issues. Project Understanding also invites anyone who is interested to get involved in the group. Meetings are held 2-3 times a month, and you can contact Sheila Hill (ext. 8457) to get more information.

But before that time comes, I urge all of the members of the community to act and familiarize yourself with the issues at hand. I urge students to see how they might be excluding others simply based on issues of race, social status or fraternity/sorority affiliation. I urge faculty, staff and administrators to do the same, and I add the challenge to let the students who are under your care know how important it is to acknowledge that problems do exist, but that we shall strive to meet and to overcome them. Because I assure you, no matter how much we might want to ignore these problems, they will not go away. Unless we acknowledge and seek to understand our problems, they will continue to plague our community, both the community at PC and the larger world community, a community that, when we enter it after our years at PC, we could be grossly unprepared to handle.

Organizational Funding

The third option would allow student organizations to maintain their current budget without any changes but would institute an additional student activity fee to supplement the budgets of these organizations. The SGFC would collect these funds and then allocate them to student organizations through the same process utilized in the second option.

"The problem with this system is that it's double taxation," said Philpott. "You're already paying to fund the organizations, but then you're paying another fee to fund the organizations, and that was the main problem with this. Even though politically it was the easiest thing to do, it wasn't the right thing to do, so we came up with an option four."

The fourth option, like the second, would give the SGFC control over the money from the general fee that is currently used for student activities. Furthermore, the SGFC would have power to increase or decrease the fees as needed. The SGA proposed that the fee for student activities be increased to $200 for the 2000-2001 academic year—an increase of about $50—and renamed a student activity fee or student activity tax.

SOIT unanimously chose the fourth option and presented it to the College budget committee for consideration. Although the budget committee recommended a plan that is much closer to the third option than it is to the option that SOIT adopted, Philpott said that the SGA is still pleased with the committee's decision.

"The Student Organizational Funding Task Force is pleased that this small battle was won," said Philpott. "It wasn't what we asked for, but you have to be pleased with small victories and steps in the right direction. The College endorsing ideas and concepts means that we've made an impact in people's thinking. But the task force is not happy with students being overtaxed. We do think that organizations should be able to get more money, but we're going to work to see that option three doesn't happen."

If the SGFC should be granted complete control over organizational funding, Philpott said, then he thinks that the SGFC should make no changes to organizational budgets for the 2000-2001 academic year but that organizations should present an accurate log of all their expenditures in March of 2001. Based on these reports, the SGFC can determine how much money each organization can receive for the 2001-2002 academic year.

"The vision is that the first year everyone will receive the exact same budget they got this year," said Philpott. "That's helpful because I think we've prevented another budget cut for student organizations. Last year, SUB received a $10,000 budget cut, and we have more students in the freshman class than we had last year. We, the student government and finance committee, want to make sure that that kind of irresponsible budget cutting doesn't happen. If the College needs to make a budget cut, they should allow student organizations to first propose their budget to the directors of the College and then to the Officers, and then they should explain why [the organization] receives a $10,000 cut. I don't think anyone is able to explain this $10,000 cut to SUB."

WAP offers students opportunities off the beaten path

This year Presbyterian College welcomes the Wilderness Activities Program to its campus. WAP, as it is more affectionately called, strives to offer students new opportunities to explore and grow to love adventures and the outdoors.

"Here, it fills a need," said coordinator Brandon Liles. "People are interested in the outdoors. For people who'd never done it, it's hard to ask a stranger to take them camping. Now we have someone sanctioned by the college."

WAP "is really diverse," said David Latham, freshman. "It's a lot of stuff that's kind of out of the ordinary."

After merely two months of existence, WAP has already released a mission statement.

"Presbyterian College's Wilderness Activity Program is designed for the students, faculty and staff of Presbyterian College," reads the mission statement. "The primary goals of the program are centered in fostering physical, emotional and intellectual development, self reliance, meaningful interpersonal relationships and awareness of environmental issues."

Thus far, adventures have included skydiving, hiking a 25 mile portion of the Appalachian Trail, extreme paintball and rafting/repelling this past weekend. According to Liles, participants have ranged from utter novices to the very experienced.

"We usually have a good mix between people who go all the time and who've never gone before," said Liles. "Different activities draw different people. My goal is to offer enough activities so if you didn't want to do something this month, you might be interested in something next month."

Although sky diving was rained out on their first attempt, participant Katy Tarter still approved of the trip.

"It rocked my world," said Tarter, a sophomore. "It's a great stress reliever, puts you in a good mood, and you can make new friends. There's nothing bad about it."

Liles is already planning several activities for next semester. One event he is particularly excited about is a camping trip to Cumberland Island planned for January 21-23. Other possibilities for spring semester are kayaking trips, a high ropes course, a ski trip, SCUBA diving and fly fishing.

"I see us getting a regular group going out once or twice a month," said Latham. Latham also foresees WAP "offering a very diverse range of activities on the weekend for the PC community."

Membership in WAP is twenty dollars in dues. Included with the fee is a tee-shirt with the WAP logo and a discount on all trips. Plus, equipment rental is free.

"We just try to offer quality programs and get students interested and in a learning environment," said Liles. "People involved in outdoor activities tend to be a little isolationist and are leary to approach strangers. We offer ways to plan trips among peers."

Knippers exhibit depicts powerful, violent Biblical images

by Skye Earls
Staff Writer

Biblical stories color the walls of the Elizabeth Stone Harper Gallery. The paintings, the work of artist Edward Knippers, are draped on display until Nov. 14. On its opening day, a reception was given for Knippers, who gave a gallery talk.

During the talk, Knippers stressed the necessity of art in today's society and the importance of art becoming more than mere escapism.

"Virtual reality is fine until you have to go to the bathroom," said

Knippers. "We live in a physical world, and art should reflect that physicality. . . . We live in a society where there are no standards for art—where productions rich only in shock value are often called art."

The works are large panels of oil paintings, each portraying a biblical story with quotations from the corresponding story off to the side for the viewer.

Associate professor of art Mark Anderson, who studied under Knippers at Ashbury College, describes Knippers' paintings as large-scale, expressionistic paintings which narrate, in a poetic fashion, Biblical stories. He further said that they are conceived as cycles where Knippers addressed the thematic concerns of Old and New Testament characters with an eye to the inherent prophetic qualities of both the painterly and Biblical traditions.

"I think of Ed as a sort of latter day Vertian Renaissance or Baroque painter in the tradition of Rubens, Titian and Tintoretto," said Anderson. "He is merging the power of expressionist easel painting with the grand operatic and classical traditions of the Mediterranean fresco and mural painting."

In 1975, critic Theodore Prescott described Edward Knippers' works as "a series of large watercolors of heads—gaudy, primitive and aggressive." He also wrote that the colors "were intense and sometimes punctuated with areas of glitter."

"I think it is powerful, violently positive work, worthy of a second and third consideration," Anderson said. "It makes me think about "It is a powerful, violently positive work, worthy of second and third consideration. It makes me think about things more carefully."

things—more carefully. This is a good thing."

"Ed uses color and scale especially well, relating to the other with the finesse of the great abstract expressionists," said Anderson. "He also seems to have a knack for recognizing intuitively the best point of view to take on a given subject. But above all, I enjoy his loose surfaces and painterly approach."

"An obvious range comes immediately to mind ranging from religious shock to vulgar pleasure or pain," said Anderson. "It is my hope, however, that people will pause to consider, through the painted metaphor, some of the ramifications of the Incarnation. Our religious and artistic notions can become so familiar as to be commonplace and comfortable to us. If we are not circumspect, our dogma can allow us to proceed, unexamined, down a path toward hypocrisy and corruption."

In order to achieve this theological purpose, Knippers paints all his figures in the nude.

"The nudity in Knippers' work reveals a sense of timelessness among his figures, preventing any hang-ups considering the appropriateness of the dress in relation to the time period," said junior art major Aaron Collier. "Knippers also stated he uses nudity in his work to illustrate the fact that Christ's coming in the flesh requires. His coming as gender-specific. Many people tend to over-spiritualize Christ, Knippers claimed, and this is his way of addressing the necessity of Christ's coming in the flesh to endure overcome and fail to commit any sin that Man could face. Knippers' work is realistic rather than idealistic in nature, enabling the viewer to take into account his/her own body when interacting with the piece."

"Take Ed told me while he was here, 'You don't want to be a close-minded bigot, but then again you don't want to be so open-minded that your brains fall out,'" said Anderson. "It helps to think about the whole person—body, soul and spirit involved in the very real and serious business of moral choice and consequence."

"The show's intent serves a dose of what this campus desperately needs in leading the viewer to examine where he/she stands in relation to Christ," said Collier. "The show depicts Christ performing miracles as a compassionate servant, dying savior and risen Lord. The life-size figures engage the viewer, confronting him/her with biblical men and women and with Christ, who is obviously fully man and fully God."

"Without a working knowledge of the text involved, one may get some of the full significance of these paintings, but these images are clearly rooted in and, in some ways, servant to the works they illuminate," said Anderson.

'Dynamic Duo' of Brailsford and Soileau make a difference

by Rachel Jernigan
Staff Writer

Lake Lucy and Ethel, Thelma and Louise and Betty and Wilma, seniors Elizabeth Soileau and Sarah Brailsford are quite a pair.

This duo first met their freshman year when they were assigned as studentites. Each had several different reasons for coming here, but they do agree that meeting former students played a big role in their decision. Soileau, a Baton Rouge, La. native, actually found out about PC while visiting Montreal, N.C.

"I met some students up there who were from PC," she said. "They were so excited about it and encouraged me to visit. When I did, I really liked everything PC had to offer."

Brailsford, who is from Orangeburg, S.C., looked at nearby Wofford and Furman before making the decision to become a Blue Hose.

"I wanted a small liberal arts college that had a major in Elementary Education," Brailsford said. "I visited PC and everyone seemed so nice and friendly. Everything just felt right."

Once Brailsford and Soileau arrived on campus, they quickly became involved in the variety of activities that the College offers. They both joined Alpha Delta Pi, Westminster Fellowship and Student Volunteer Services. Both girls had been very involved in serving their communities in high school, and they loved the concept of SVS. Brailsford became involved with Bell Street Big Sisters her freshman year then became vice intern last year. Currently, she is serving as the head coordinator of social services.

"Help to coordinate programs at the Open Door, which I go to about once a week," Brailsford said. "I also meet with the other co-coordinators of the different social service programs."

Soileau is now serving as the intern for SVS. Her duties include representing SVS on the President's Council, meeting with vice intern Jennifer Glenn and with SVS director Sheila Hill, and also meeting with all the head and co-coordinators of the many different SVS programs.

"Try and go to all the programs at least once," said Soileau. "Publicity and taking calls from the community members that we serve are also some of my responsibilities."

In addition to all her daily activities with SVS, Soileau finds time to work with Peer Connectors and Project Understanding. She is also a member of Celtic Cross and helps with a youth group at Thornwell.

Student Government appealed to Brailsford, who is senior class president. She is also involved in Omicron Delta Kappa and is a team leader in Celtic Cross.

Despite their hectic schedules, both Brailsford and Soileau found time to study abroad. Soileau studied in Sydney, Australia for a semester. However, it was her participation in the Third World seminar class, which travels to Honduras during the spring, that

Names: Sarah Brailsford and Elizabeth Soileau

Hometowns: Orangeburg, S.C. and Baton Rouge, La.

Majors: Elementary Education and Psychology taught her a lot about the world and made the biggest impact on her. Brailsford was unable to study abroad for a semester due to the many class requirements for education majors, but she was able to travel to Oxford for a couple of weeks during the summer.

In their very spare time, both Brailsford and Soileau like to hang out with friends. Soileau also enjoys sleeping and watching basketball. For Brailsford, traveling and singing karaoke are favorite pastimes. As to their plans for the future, Soileau, a psychology major, plans to work with AmeriCorps or do mission work through a church. She also would like to some day get her masters in counseling. Brailsford will also do a year of volunteer work, and would love to visit the United Kingdom. After that, she plans on working in the education field.

When asked for any parting words of wisdom, Brailsford and Soileau had many sage words of advice.

"Never waste a single moment," they said. "Make scrapbooks and take lots of pictures; you'll be glad that you did. And never let a single opportunity go by. And, oh yeah, join SVS!"

It is very obvious to anyone who knows them that Brailsford and Soileau have taken their own advice and, in the process, built a lasting friendship.

"God only blessed me with a birth brother, but He gave me a sister when He brought Elizabeth into my life," said Brailsford. "We bicker and make fun of each other, just like sisters. But I feel as close to her as someone from my own family. I love her for her genuine care for others and for the way she can truly be herself. She's an incredible friend."

"Sarah has such a deep desire to help other people," said Soileau. "She is one of the truest and most genuine people that I know. I admire her enthusiasm and the way she truly cares about people. She wants to make the world a better place, and I have no doubt that she will."

Brailsford and Soileau are indeed quite a team. Their strong friendship as well as their work ethic has impressed the people who work with them.

"They are the dynamic duo," said Sheila Hill, director of SVS. "Elizabeth is straightforward and very precise while Sarah likes to reflect and take a look at things from all sides. Their personalities balance out well. Their friendship shows just how college allows two people from different backgrounds to meet, to become good friends, and to be able to work together to serve others."

Students express excitement, concern over the changes in Springs

by Doodle Harris
Content Editor

"Could you put some more espresso in here?" It tastes like milk.

Sorry, I'm still learning to use this machine.

Oh, I've never made a sub sandwich before.

You mean cheese costs extra?

These lines and more could be heard with the re-opening of the food services in Springs Center on Wednesday, Oct. 20. For the first time, the canteen is under the direction of the Sodexo Corporation, who has brought Freshen's Yogurt, Starbucks Coffee and the Sub Connection to the campus.

The first day of services introduced over 300 students to the new dining options. Although operations were somewhat chaotic, students arrived in droves to check out the latest addition to Presbyterian College's menu. Senior Bob Hill gave the veteran two thumbs up.

"The food is very good; the best I've ever had at PC," said

Hill with his mouth full. "The wait was a little long, but that's probably to be expected the first day."

Randolf Robinson is the manager of food services in Springs. According to Robinson, students could not wait for the canteen and grill to open.

"It's been a long process," said Robinson. "But students can appreciate this food better than cafeteria food. I'm glad to be a part of the PC family and I hope with student and faculty support that Springs will be a great success."

In addition to students' positive responses to the food, Robinson contends that the employees enjoy the opportunity as well.

"They say we've been very busy and they like serving the students," Robinson said.

For purchasing meals at Springs, students have two options: they may pay cash or, for those on the meal plan, they may use "bonus bucks." Students with the 15 meal plan have allotted $115 in bonus bucks and students on the 21 meal plan have $75 to spend. Although students are allowed to use bonus bucks in the cafeteria, swaps for meals cannot be used to pay for food in Springs. However, not all students agree with this plan.

"The best idea would be to have a depreciating meal plan," said Michael York, junior.

"I think they should make [eating at Springs] part of the meal plan," said Shelley Horsely, senior. "I'd like to see the meal plan done away with altogether. I'd save money if we just had an account to put money in and draw from when we purchase meals."

According to Robinson, projected earnings for the center were around $1200 a day. Since the opening, average daily profits have been over $2700.

In general, student reaction to the changes are mixed. Most like the opportunity for a new menu, but were eager to express their concerns.

"It's good, but slow and expensive," said Brandon Fraix, junior. "I love the coffee, but the prices are ridiculous."

Robinson said improvements yet to be made are renovations to the back for more operation space. Also, Starbucks will extend their hours. Due to student request, they will be able to serve hot chocolate soon, Robinson hopes.

"If anyone has any suggestions, I welcome them," he said.

Volleyball team spikes recent opponents

by Jack Carmody
Staff Writer

The PC volleyball team has been spiking its way through the competition lately.

The team has failed to let its youthfulness show this season. The Blue Hose boast an impressive record, and they are ranked second behind Gardner-Webb in the South Atlantic Conference.

Earlier last month the Blue Hose traveled to Augusta, Ga. to compete in the Augusta State University Tournament. PC's first opponents were the Patriots of Francis Marion. The ladies started off strong, winning the first match 15-7. The next three matches, however, belonged to the Patriots, 15-2, 15-8 and 15-2. PC had help from Aisha Walker, who tallied 18 kills, Janelle McVerry, who had 43 assists and Kati Scott, who had five blocks. Kinsley Craven also served up three aces.

Their next tournament opponent was the University of Montevallo, whom PC dropped in four matches 15-13, 15-10, 12-15, 15-8. Their final game was against the host, Augusta State. PC came back from a first match defeat to beat the Jaguars 10-5, 15-7, 15-7, 15-15, 17-15.

Aisha Walker's performance in the tournament earned her MVP honors. The sophomore outside hitter averaged 4.2 kills, 2.7 digs and 1.0 blocks in the three games. Walker had her best showing against Augusta State, where she had 23 kills, 14 digs and 6 blocks. Freshman phenom Janelle McVerry also earned a spot on the All-Tournament team, while averaging 9.8 assists, 2.8 digs and 0.90 blocks.

The team's next opponent was Mars Hill College. The ladies rolled past Mars Hill in straight matches 15-12, 15-6, 15-13. PC was once again led by Aisha Walker, who had 16 kills and 23 digs. McVerry had a team high 46 assists. Dawn Bright also added 10 kills and 23 digs. Senior Stephanie Cloud helped the cause with 15 digs of her own.

On October 25, PC travelled to Jefferson City to take on Carson-Newman. The Blue Hose were once again victorious, winning three games to two, 15-7, 15-17, 15-12, 9-15 and 15-6. Aisha Walker had an incredible 30 kills.

Looking ahead to the SAC tournament, PC's biggest challenge will most likely be number one ranked Gardner-Webb, who defeated PC earlier this season.

Janelle McVerry likes the team's chances. "I feel we have really come together this season as a team," said McVerry. "We are peaking at just the right time."

One thing is certain—Head Coach Lisa Bugay will definitely have her ladies in top form as they head into the post-season.

Blue Hose golf team successful in fall tournaments

by Anne Sullivan
Staff Writer

The Presbyterian golf team is off to a great start after a third place finish in the Billy Joe Patton Intercollegiate golf tournament early this semester and their first tournament championship of the season in the Mountain Air Fall Classic.

The golf team has also participated in the Presbyterian College Intercollegiate tournament, the Chris Cochran Intercollegiate tournament and the Davidson Invitational tournament. These tournaments round out the schedule of the golf team for the rest of this semester, but they have a lot more tournaments to play in the spring semester.

The PC golf team is full of seasoned upperclassmen and new talented freshmen. The returning senior to the team is Russ Padgett. The returning juniors are Thomas Addison III, Jay Biber, Mark Easley, Andrew Gardner and Jon Sjostrom. Jay Stephens, Lawton Greenwood and Robbie Timms round out the roster for sophomores. New faces on the Blue Hose golf team this year are freshmen John Speight from Pinehurst, N.C., Jimmy Shaw, from Oklahoma City, Okla.; Bryan Kelley, from Spartanburg, S.C. and T.J. Ostrom, from Yorktown, Penn.

The Blue Hose's head golf coach, Tommy Addison, said that he is proud to be coaching golf here at PC for his eighth season. A graduate of PC himself, Addison was named GCAA NCAA Division II District III Coach of the Year. He led last year's golf team to eight top ten finishes in ten tournaments. Coach Addison was also named SAC Coach of the Year in 1996 and 1997.

Basketball teams preparing for 1999-2000 season

by Jack Carmody
Staff Writer

After months of running and conditioning, the PC men's and women's basketball teams finally started working out and practicing in the gym to get ready for the 1999-2000 season.

The basketball season officially started with practice at midnight on October 14. The Lady Blue Hose games start on November 12 with the Lowcountry All-Stars Exhibition at PC. The men's basketball team's games start on November 15 with the exhibition game against the Columbia Sharkheads also at home in Templeton Gymnasium.

Last season, the men's Blue Hose basketball team finished with a 20-10 overall record and a second place finish in the South Atlantic Conference regular season. The winning season marked Head Coach Gregg Nibert's ninth in ten years at PC and his third 20-win season.

Returning this year for the men's squad are seniors Yahnirek Martin and Mac Harper and juniors Kevin Campbell, DJ Humphries and Brad Westbrook. New to the Blue Hose team this season are freshmen Curtis Stamps, Chuck Rayford, Mayes McEntire, Drew Brannon, Mo Boykin, Rod Isom, Jeff Whittle, Doug Davis, Preston Davis and Jerry Barlow.

The 1999-2000 women's basketball team will look to continue the recent success that the Lady Blue Hose have enjoyed over the last few years including two straight South Atlantic Conference regular season and tournament titles and four trips to the NCAA Division II national tournament in the last six seasons. Along the way, Head Coach Beth Couture was named the 1998-99 SAC Coach of the Year, her third such honor in the last five years.

Last season's team picked up where the 1997-98 team left off, posting a program record 24-6 record, winning a share of the SAC regular season title with an 11-3 mark, the SAC Tournament title and a return trip to the NCAA regionals. The women's basketball team is led by seniors Heather Couch, Jill Neumann, Christina McRae; juniors Candice Choice, Rachel Sloan, Sara Smyrl, Tracy Woody, Amy Monroe; and sophomores Toni Leopard, Katie Davis, Merritt Misner, Nicole Chittam and Janet Vicks. New to the team this year are freshmen Jennifer Dorminey and Heather Parnell.

Four athletes from the Blue Hose basketball teams earned preseason honors. DJ Humphries was named to the All-South Atlantic Conference preseason first-team. Humphries finished second on the team and fourth in the SAC in rebounds last season with a 7.5 rebound per game average. Rachel Sloan, Tracy Woody, and Toni Leopard were also named to the preseason All-SAC teams representing the Lady Blue Hose.

Women's Soccer: Lady Blue Hose fall to number 2 in recent poll; finish 1999 fall season undefeated in SAC

by Scott Moore
Staff Writer

A recent NCAA Division II poll ranked the Lady Blue Hose number two in the nation, following a 1-1 tie with Catawba College on Oct. 30 which was their last game of the regular season.

The tie caused the team to fall from being ranked number one in the nation to being ranked number two and left the Lady Blue Hose with a record of 14-0-1 for the season overall and 7-0-1 in the conference. This season the team has outscored their opponents 52-2. With the tie, PC sealed the conference title.

"I think that it is a great accomplishment to go undefeated all season," said Head Coach Brian Purcell.

The team's number one ranking marked the first time since 1999 that any PC sports team has been ranked first in the nation. Their number one ranking came after a 4-0 win over Queens College, a 2-0 win over Erskine College, a win over Newberry and a 3-0 win over Lander University.

"We're trying to forget about the regular season," said Purcell, "because it has no effect on the postseason."

The Lady Blue Hose will play the first round of the South Atlantic Conference Tournament Wednesday, Nov. 3 at PC on the Ponderosa against Mars Hill. If they win, they will travel to Mars Hill for the conference Semifinals and the Finals.

The Lady Blue Hose plan to start fresh as they enter the postseason. The outcome of the Conference Tournament does not have a direct effect on the Lady Blue Hose's chances of getting a bid to the NCAA Division II national tournament which is held at the Division II schools across the country that are playing in the tournament. So, if given a bid to go to the national tournament, the Lady Blue Hose could very well be hosting a tournament game here at PC.

PC Sports in Brief

Men's soccer beats Catawba 1-0, falls to Clayton State U., Tusculum

The Presbyterian men's soccer team shutout Catawba 1-0 last week before falling to Clayton State in the final regular season game last Saturday and to Tusculum in the first round of the SAC Tournament Tuesday.

PC's winning goal against Catawba came early in the game, when, in the ninth minute, Warren Turner capitalized on a free kick after a yellow card was given to Catawba's Damon McDougald.

The second half featured end-to-end action as both goalkeepers came up big on key situations. PC's Andy Pfaffl, who was named SAC player of the week earlier that week, made six saves to earn his seventh-and-a-half shutout of the year.

But the Hose fell that weekend with a 1-0 loss against Clayton State University.

"We dominated the whole game, but we didn't do well," said senior midfielder Roddy Dinsmore. "If we had played well, we would have not only dominated the game, but we would have won too."

The Blue Hose played host to Tusculum this past Tuesday marking the beginning of the South Atlantic Conference Tournament and post-season. The team lost in a shootout 5-4. As of press time no stats were available.

Cross-country season closes, Braden named to all-SAC 1st team

Both the men's and women's cross country teams ended their long season this past week with the SAC Championships in North Carolina. The NCAA Division II Regionals will be held November 6 in Spartanburg, SC. Zach Braden was named to the All-SAC first team, and Alison Outz was named to the All-SAC second team.

Football team enters "Bronze Derby" showdown with Newberry on three game winning streak

by Hank Coleman
Sports Editor

Ever since the close defeat against Carson-Newman College on PC's Homecoming weekend, the Blue Hose seemed to have been slipping. They lost the next two out of three games, but the PC football team has found a second wind in the last half of the season by winning four out of their last five games as the season draws to a close.

After last Saturday's win against Wingate University, the Blue Hose football team heads into the final two games of the season with a three game winning streak. Presbyterian College put on an offensive show against the home team in the 43-35 win. Sophomore quarterback Todd Cunningham threw for 385 yards and three touchdowns. Two of the touchdowns came in the first quarter as PC jumped ahead of Wingate 22-7 with Cunningham connecting with his wide receivers Di Young, Brad Boleman and Kevie Smith. Running back Donald Wilson also rushed for 143 yards and two touchdowns. PC and Wingate combined for over 1,000 yards in total offense which led to the high scoring game.

"The offense did great!" said senior linebacker Cory Dickerson. "They put up plenty of points that we needed, but our defense gave up a lot of points, too. A win's a win though, and we will take it any way we can get it."

dous defensive performance led Presbyterian College past Mars Hill College, 35-14, in South Atlantic Conference football action on Saturday, October 23 in Bailey Memorial Stadium. In front of a home crowd of 1,152 fans, the Blue Hose football team held Mars Hill to 97 yards rushing and 240 yards passing. The Blue Hose offense, in turn, recorded 216 yards rushing and 141 yards passing.

Three weeks ago during Fall Break, running back Donald Wilson led the Blue Hose with 19 carries for 98 yards and two touchdowns in the football team's 49-34 victory over the University of Virginia's College at Wise (ranked #10 in the NAIA) at home. Cunningham completed 16 out of 23 pass attempts for 213 yards and one touchdown. Boleman caught five passes for 35 yards, while Travis Smith pulled down three receptions for 97 yards and a touchdown.

Presbyterian College's record is now 6-3 overall and 3-3 in the South Atlantic Conference. This week the Blue Hose will play host to Gardner-Webb over Parents' Weekend at 1:30pm. Then, Saturday November 13 is the annual Bronze Derby where the Blue Hose will play rival Newberry College at 2pm in Newberry, S.C.

"If we come out and play like we are capable in all three phases of the game—offense, defense, and special teams, the Bronze Derby will once again rest in Clinton," said sophomore football player Derrick Clark.

Suitcase College?

Students express concern over weekend exodus

by Doodle Harris
Content Editor

When touring Presbyterian College, prospective students—and especially prospective students from far-away places—are assured that “PC is not a suitcase college.” According to such claims and the emphasis on community, students stay here on the weekends to enjoy PC’s activities and each other’s good company. Dorm life supposedly fosters a family environment. PC’s strategic plan even states that the campus will be an experience of “Moving without leaving home.”

But according to a recent poll conducted by the “Blue Stocking,” many PC students believe that the College has become a suitcase College.

The Blue Stocking staff designed a survey asking student opinions and reactions to our questions. One hundred thirty-one students anonymously replied—46 freshman, 26 sophomores, 40 juniors and 19 seniors.

Fifty-seven point three percent of those who responded answered yes. Thirty-two point one percent said no, and 10.6% were undecided. Sixty-nine point one percent of students from South Carolina also answered affirmatively.

“It’s easier to get an answer to the question ‘where are you going this weekend?’ than ‘what are you having for lunch,’” said a sophomore.

Students were also asked how many of the first eleven weekends of the school year they spent at least one night away from campus and where they went. Roughly one third (33.1%) of all students spent at least one night away each weekend. Twenty percent of nights spent off campus were with school-related activities, such as sports events, religious retreats and Greek activities. Students with permanent residences in South Carolina are about twice as likely to go home as out-of-state students.

Of those students who replied that PC is not a suitcase college, several students suggested reasons for why not.

“PC is too fun to leave every weekend,” said one freshman.

Others offered explanations of why PC might seem like a “Explanations and evidence for why PC is becoming a suitcase college were diverse. Most cited that the exodus was worst on weekends without home football games or other campus-wide activities. Several also mentioned that students often have friends from high school or relationships with students from other colleges and universities.

“People just enjoy being at home,” said one sophomore.

“I don’t think there are enough alcohol-free activities to do on the weekends,” said a freshman.

“All there is to do here is go out to the frat houses,” said a sophomore. “It gets old.”

Several participants in the survey cited the younger students as leading the suitcase college phenomenon.

“I see it more with the freshman than anyone else,” said a speculative sophomore.

Thirty-six point two percent of all freshman leave PC and 61.7% of freshman who leave go home.

Seniors seemed particularly disturbed by the trend. Seventy-eight point nine percent of all seniors believed that PC is more of a suitcase college than when they entered four years ago.

“Each year I have been here, there have been less and less people on campus during the weekends,” said one senior.

“People all take off on Friday as soon as class gets out,” said another. “There are not enough activities to do in Clinton to keep people here.”

“Becoming [a suitcase college]?” echoed one senior. “It is. It has been for a while. Let’s face it. Clinton doesn’t offer a lot of entertainment.”

“Every weekend most of the campus leaves,” said a freshman. “The only positive from that is that you can get a good parking place.”

Where have all the students gone?

suitcase college.

“I think any college has people leave for the weekend,” said a junior who had spent 8 of his first 11 weekends away. “With our limited population, it is more noticeable.”

“The majority of people stay around for the weekend,” said a freshman. “I leave just because I like my boyfriend.”

Four students who claimed that PC was not a suitcase college admit they have left every weekend.

POINT

Students should work to correct suitcase college syndrome

If you're a student, chances are you're probably reading this editorial on an airplane or in a car en route to your home for turkey, football and the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade.

But as wonderful as the comforts of home are, we are somewhat concerned that a large number of students leave the campus for home many weekends of the semester, according to our recent poll. The common perception that PC is a suitcase college, we believe, seriously undermines the College's role as a residential College. Certainly there is nothing wrong with going home for the weekend, and, admittedly, Clinton is no mecca of culture and entertainment. But when a large number of students vacate the campus every weekend, part of the Presbyterian College experience is lost, for the education provided at PC is just as much about relationships formed outside the classroom as it is about ideas studied in the classroom.

Furthermore, the suitcase college syndrome seriously threatens to undermine the College's ability to attract talented students from throughout the nation, since students from distant states are unlikely to want to attend a college with little weekend social life.

The past two years have brought about some improvements to the quality of on-campus social life during the weekends. The Student Union Board's presentation of blockbuster movies on the weekends with the financial assistance of the Russell Program is a particularly good contribution to weekend entertainment.

Nevertheless, improvements to campus social life are still needed. And while administrators certainly have reason to be concerned about the exodus of students from the campus on weekends, administrators cannot provide more social activities for students unless students make suggestions about the kinds of activities that they want. The weekend social scene will improve only if students improve it themselves.

College should offer students class on self-defense

Although PC is a relatively safe campus, students may one day have to face dangers outside of the "PC Bubble." As students at PC, we do not feel prepared to face the potential hazards that come with living alone, living in a metropolitan area, or just walking down the street. Recently, our "PC bubble" was invaded by an armed criminal, materializing our fears and prompting this letter. Nearly everyone was seriously shaken up by this occurrence. One of the reasons for this alarm was that few students felt prepared to defend themselves if necessary. There is a fairly simple answer, however, to these concerns: a self-defense class taken as the required "activity course." The course could offer lessons in self-defense, along with classes on the effects of alcohol, the date-rage drugs (GHB, Rohypnol), seeking counseling after an attack, eating disorders and other general means of protection. We feel that a course of this nature would prove itself more beneficial than some of the other activity courses. It would arm each participant with the knowledge and confidence needed for personal safety and well-being, and in the long-run help to make PC a safer campus. We hope that the PC administration will consider this proposal immediately for future years. In hopes of making PC safer for all students, Thanksgiving is only days away. Presbyterian College has a great deal to be thankful for; in addition, the student body has a great deal to be thankful for. Our fall semester has been very exciting. One of Presbyterian's most gifted and largest classes has been successfully oriented and has successfully adjusted to life in college. Sports teams like the women's soccer team and others excel and finished with superb records. The first season of the newly remodeled PC Cinema is almost complete and the outstanding attendance by students and faculty alike are a silent thank you to the Student Union Board and the Russell Program. The Board of Trustees endorsed the final draft of the campus's Master Plan and gave the "go ahead" on some exciting projects. The loud banging from PC's two construction projects has awakened many, but the progress on the exteriors of the buildings seems worth the extra pillow needed to blot out the noise. Many of us wonder how the winter can compare with all the excitement of the fall.

My answer to this—the fall was just the beginning! Currently student organizations began a friendly competition to raise money for the college through the annual fundraising effort, the Annual Fund and Scotsman Club Foundation. Fourteen organizations agreed to participate in this fundraising drive during several winter and spring evenings! A Spirit Week will be hosted this winter! PC's first 24-hour computer lab will open as soon as the security firm installs several safety features. The SCOT Blueline signs are at the printers and will appear soon with a posted route.

What can the everyday student do to make the winter a success? Encourage your organizations to participate in the Phonathon and during Spirit Week. In addition, for the SCOT Blueline to prevent drunk driving, responsible drivers who do not cancel at the last minute need to volunteer. A new sign-up drive will begin soon. The Student Government appreciates all you have done this fall to contribute to the excitement and successes of the fall. We hope that you have a wonderful Thanksgiving and wish you a luck on your exams. And to all the athletes: teams—Go Blue Hose!

PC welcomes Dr. Arthur Jones for diversity discussion

by Ben Acton
Managing Editor

On November 15 and 16, PC welcomed Dr. Arthur Jones, professor of clinical psychology at the University of Denver. He addressed the issues of diversity facing the College.

Jones's visit was the result of the work of Project Understanding (PU), a group of PC faculty, staff, students and administrators who are working to increase PC's awareness and appreciation of cultural diversity.

Ms. Sheila Hill, assistant dean of students and director of student volunteer services, as well as director of PU, expressed excitement about having Jones on campus.

"PU wanted the convocation [on November 16] to be a special event that would allow engagement with the speaker," said Hill. "With [assistant professor of psychology Dr. Eric Johnson's] recommendation, we felt that Dr. Jones possessed the clinical skills to engage people in a productive discussion and also felt that he had the credentials and experiences to be able to relate well with the faculty."

Because of these attributes, Jones was scheduled to share his knowledge at four major events: a meeting with PU Monday afternoon, a "Food for Thought" dinner/discussion group open to all students Monday night, the convocation on Tuesday morning and a "Campus Conversation" Tuesday night.

Monday's discussion focused on the unifying force of music and the African American spirituals.

According to Hill, the "Food for Thought" discussion was an important step in recognizing that, despite the differences people might have, there are things everyone has in common.

There are some things we share," said Hill. "One being that cultures around the world around the world are moved by music. The spirituals tell a story that evoke emotion, that evoke appreciation, and that can evoke a willingness to heal. And I think that for us as a campus we also need to heal."

Jones, agreed, adding, "I think the music is a terrific educational tool. You can talk about things and analyze things in song, but the music says it in a way... other communication doesn't."

After a busy Monday evening, Jones moved on to a busier Tuesday, addressing the College community during the convocation hour, where he explained different elements of diversity and how communities have to struggle and sometimes fail, in order to attain the vision of diversity they want. Following the convocation, Jones attended a luncheon where students, faculty, staff, and administrators reflected over Jones's comments.

The key to Jones's, however, was the "Campus Conversation" held Tuesday night from 7:30 to 8:30 in Springs.

"The final piece of the puzzle is the 'Campus Conversation,'" said Hill on Monday. "We're going to attempt to put a face on this issue [of diversity] that people say we don't have."

Many students came away from the conversation with an understanding of the diversity issues facing PC and the need to address those issues.

"I just think you recognize not a lot of diversity at PC, but I never knew it was a problem until tonight," said Melissa Clemmons. Alison Howell, sophomore, agreed, adding, "I thought people brought up a lot of different issues, and it was good that they talked them through."

"I think it's important that we're educated about this lack of diversity that we have on campus," said Sara Hopper, junior. "There are people that are unhappy and who don't feel accepted, and I think that's a real injustice to those students."

Some students also stressed that the conversations between Jones and students was only the first step in a long process of addressing PC's diversity issues.

"The conversations with Dr. Jones and students were marvelous," said junior Michael Adams. "Until individuals are willing to step out and associate and learn about what they think is wrong or what they feel is different, a true change will never be made."

"The positive was the numbers here [tonight]... and just hearing different voices coming from different avenues," said Jackie Pearson, senior. "Really, a problem is getting some support from Admin. We really need their support because without them nothing is going to change."

Dr. Peter Hobbie, associate professor of religion, also addressed the lack of participating faculty in the meetings with Dr. Jones, including a meeting Jones was scheduled to have with faculty Tuesday afternoon. Only 12 faculty members attended.

"The faculty need to be aware of the fact that students judge their concern about this issue by their participation," said Hobbie. "If they don't participate, students are going to think they don't care."

Despite the lack of participating faculty, Hill still expressed excitement over the results of Jones's visit.

"Would I have liked to have had more people?" said Hill. "Yes, but this is a building point. Giving everyone a specific area to tie in, how this relates to you, or to him or to her; that's got to be the next step."

"I'm very encouraged by the energy of some dedicated people who really care a lot about the community," said Jones, in assessing PC's current situation. "If you have a few people who are really committed, a tremendous amount can happen."

Women's soccer loses heartbreaker in tournament

by Hank Coleman
Sports Editor

The number-two seeded Lady Crusaders of Belmont-Abbey College just edged out the Presbyterian College Blue Hose, who were seeded number one in the Southeast region, 3-2 in the first round of the Women's NCAA Division II National Soccer Championships this past Sunday afternoon. A huge crowd of over 1,100 fans on PC's home field, the Ponderosa, looked on as the Blue Hose took an early lead in the fifth minute of play when freshman forward Jessi Adair played a ball across the goal for senior forward Karen Markham, who found the back of the net. The Blue Hose soccer team outshot the women's team from Belmont-Abbey in the first half, but failed to score again before halftime.

The second half saw Belmont-Abbey increase its offensive play and outshoot Presbyterian College 8-4, but the Blue Hose increased their lead to two goals with another score in the 52nd minute of play by senior forward Lucy Evans. PC looked like they had everything under control with a 2-0 lead and only thirty minutes left in the game, but the Lady Crusaders stepped up their play by putting three goals past sophomore goalkeeper Laura Johnson in a 14-minute period. The momentum began to shift to the visiting Lady Crusaders when a Belmont-Abbey midfielder picked up a loose deflection in the penalty box and bunted the ball into the PC goal. Just one minute later the Crusaders tied the game on a header which had been bouncing around the mouth of the goal. The game-winning goal for the visiting team came in the 70th minute of play when a forward served a perfect cross that was hammered into the net.

The Lady Crusaders of Belmont-Abbey College improved their record to 20-2-0 and moved on to the round of eight to face Barry University (FL) this weekend. The Lady Blue Hose finished their incredible season with a record of 15-2-1 during which the women's soccer team spent a week as the number one ranked team in the nation in NCAA Division II.

"I want to thank the team for all their effort and everything they have done, especially the seniors, and thank them for an unbelievable ride, because this year has been phenomenal," said PC head coach Brian Purcell.

PC Sports in Brief

The Columbia Sharkheads beat the Blue Hose men's basketball team 93-87 in an exhibition game last Monday night at Templeton Gym. PC was led by junior center DJ Humphries with 22 points and 16 rebounds. The Blue Hose will open the 1999-2000 season this Friday night as they participate in the Bellarmine College Tournament in Louisville, Ky.

The Presbyterian College women's basketball team defeated the Low-Country All-Stars 80-72 in an exhibition game last Friday night in Templeton. The team was led by senior guard Heather Couch who had a game-high 21 points and five assists. PC opens the 1999-2000 regular season next Friday in the Armstrong-Atlantic State University Tournament.

The number-two ranked Presbyterian volleyball team was defeated in the SAC tournament championship match by number-one ranked Gardner-Webb University, ending the team's season with an over all record of 22-11. In postseason honors, Janelle McVerry was chosen as SAC Freshman of the Year and Arisha Walker was selected to the first team All-SAC.

Coach Donna Arnold, head women's tennis coach, has announced her resignation effective November 30. She will join the National Scouting Report Recruiting Service, which scouts all women's sports. Her overall record is 209-80, and her teams have captured eight SAC titles and made nine national tournament appearances.

Senior football player Brad Bolemon was selected to play in the Snow Bowl All-Star game on January 15 in Fargo, N.D. on the campus of North Dakota State University. The game benefits the Shriners' hospitals.

Junior golfer Jay Biber has been named to the 1999 Golf Coaches Association of America Honorable Mention All-American team. He led the Blue Hose with a 75.68 stroke average last season.

Football falls to Gardner-Webb, clenches Bronze Derby

by Hank Coleman
Sports Editor

Presbyterian College's football team lost a week ago during PC's annual Parents' Weekend against visiting Gardner-Webb University 31-20 in South Atlantic Conference action in Bailey Stadium.

The Bulldogs jumped out to a seven point lead in the first quarter until PC came right back with a 61-yard touchdown pass from sophomore quarterback Todd Cunningham to junior wideout Travis Smith to bring the score within one point. Gardner-Webb went into the locker room at halftime after two more unanswered touchdowns, bringing the score up to 21-6.

In the second half, the punishment continued as the Bulldogs added a touchdown and a field goal to their score. The Blue Hose managed to come alive a little too late near the end of the game with two touchdowns, but they could not come any closer to winning. Cunningham completed 23 out of 41 passes for 292 yards and two touchdowns while leading the team in rushing with 73 yards on 18 carries. Smith led the receiving with 134 yards on seven catches and a touchdown. Gardner-Webb rolled over the Blue Hose with a total of 500 yards of offense compared to just 104 yards rushing for PC.

Presbyterian College's football team rebounded after the loss by winning the annual Bronze Derby game against rival Newberry College this past Saturday at the Indians' field. PC won its second consecutive Bronze Derby by a score of 45-35, ending the season with an overall record of 7-4 and a conference record of 4-4.

It did not take long for PC to jump on the Indians when Cunningham passed the ball to Donald Wilson for a 43 yard touchdown on the opening drive. Newberry College quickly tied the score on an interception. Then, PC scored two more touchdowns with another pass to Wilson and an interception of their own that was run into the end zone 35 yards by sophomore defensive tackle Keon Talbert. Wilson's third touchdown of the day and a catch by sophomore Tank Bryant pushed the Blue Hose lead to 35-14. PC ended its scoring for the game with a field goal by senior kicker John Redding and a ten yard run by junior running back Paul Freeman for a final score of 45-35. Wilson led the Blue Hose with 121 yards on 21 carries and three touchdowns. Todd Cunningham finished the game with 284 passing on 17 of 32 attempts.

Faculty writes resolution concerning Confederate battle flag

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

At its monthly meeting on Dec. 2, the Presbyterian College faculty unanimously passed a resolution calling for the removal of the Confederate battle flag from atop the statehouse in Columbia.

"I was very proud of the faculty," said Dr. David Gillespie, dean of the faculty and vice-president for academic affairs. "It's the first unanimous resolution I've heard of. Columbia College passed a resolution very much like it with one dissenter. The University of South Carolina faculty senate passed it by 76-12. We were the first (as far as I can tell) among colleges to vote unanimously."

The flag's position atop the statehouse has sparked debate throughout South Carolina over the past several years. Three years ago then-Governor David Beasley urged the state legislature to move the flag to a Confederate Memorial on the statehouse grounds, and more recently the NAACP enacted an economic boycott on the state until the flag is removed from the statehouse. Since that time, opposition to the flag has been growing.

According to Gillespie, a political scientist, a diversity of different groups throughout the state spanning the political and religious spectrums have formed a "grand coalition" urging the flag's removal. Included in this alliance, he said, is the Trinity Presbyterian of the Presbyterian Church (USA), the annual conference of the United Methodist Church, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Charleston, fundamentalist preacher Bob Jones III, various Jewish groups, the state chamber of commerce, former governors John West and David Beasley, city councils throughout the state and many county councils (including the Laurens County Council).

According to Gillespie, the faculty's action on the issue was prompted in part by the actions of these other groups.

"It's a wonderful alliance going up, and it's high time we joined it," said Gillespie. Last month the South Carolina Council of Independent College Presidents, chaired by PC President John Griffith, passed two resolutions relating to the flag. The first resolution asks each member institution to address the issue. The second resolution asks the Board of Trustees of the South Carolina Independent Colleges (SCICU) to approve a resolution calling for the flag's removal. The Board of Trustees of the SCICU passed the resolution 35-1-1 and was forwarded to the organization representing public colleges and universities in the state.

As it turned out, Griffith did not have to present the first resolution to the faculty, since two other similar proposals were also presented to the faculty—the proposal presented by Gillespie and another proposal presented by Joseph Nixon, dean of students.

Nixon presented a proposal from the Student Affairs Council of the faculty to endorse a resolution of the Trinity Presbyterian of the Presbyterian Church (USA). The resolution calls for the removal of the Confederate flag from the statehouse building and its memorialization at a suitable place and was approved by the faculty 56-1.

"It did not pass unanimously, I suspect, because there was some misunderstanding about what it meant to endorse it," said Gillespie. "The wording of it is, 'We Presbyterians...' and there are some non-Presbyterians in the bunch... It had nothing to do with a lack of sympathy with what the resolution said."

Gillespie then presented his resolution calling for the removal of the flag from the statehouse. The faculty unanimously approved the resolution 58-0.

Earlier last week Griffith addressed the Student Government Association on the subject. The SGA, however, voted to take no immediate action on the flag issue.

"We decided that this was such an important topic that we didn't want to take a stance until the students had a chance to voice their opinion on it," said SGA President Jay Philpott.

Philpott said that the SGA con-

POINT

Confederate battle flag should be removed from statehouse as matter of principle

At this season of the year in which we celebrate the birth of the Christ, "in whom there is neither Greek nor Jew, male nor female, slave nor free," it is appropriate that the PC community has taken a stand on one of the most divisive issues in South Carolina—the Confederate battle flag flying from the statehouse in Columbia. For this reason, we at the "Blue Stocking" applaud the faculty for their support of a resolution calling for the flag's removal and the SGA for their decision (albeit a belated one) to follow suit.

Symbols mean different things to different people. We recognize that many South Carolinians hold the flag dearly in their hearts as a symbol of the struggles of their ancestors, and we in no way wish to trample upon the memory of those who sacrificed for their families and state during the Civil War. At the same time, however, we recognize that many South Carolinians consider the flag to be a hateful symbol of racism and oppression. The lesson of the Civil War for us today is that, as Lincoln quoted Christ during the struggle, "a house divided against itself cannot stand." Quite frankly, the controversy over the Confederate battle flag has divided South Carolinians for too long, and it's high time that the state put this controversy behind it and remove the flag from the statehouse.

We are somewhat concerned, however, that, should the flag be removed from the statehouse (as we believe it ultimately will be), the motive for its removal will be based not upon the high ideals and principles embraced by the faculty and the SGA, but upon concerns about economic prudence. It has been said that there is nothing worse than doing the right thing for the wrong reason. We at the "Blue Stocking," therefore, urge all members of the Presbyterian College community and the larger South Carolina community to examine their principles and values and to act accordingly.

Kudos to admin for hearing student concerns

Two issue ago we asked College administrators to offer more performance CEPs that do not cost admission fees. Apparently administrators have listened to our concerns, and the College provided students with complimentary tickets for the "Behold, A Son" Christmas concert last weekend. Two thumbs up to the administration for their willingness to listen to students' concerns.

MY TURN: Dr. Lynne Simpson

I have just finished teaching the work of one of our country's literary greats, Nobel Prize winner Toni Morrison. To teach Morrison remains an elating as well as exhausting emotional experience. Her 1998 Pulitzer Prize winning novel, "Beloved," depicts the horror of slavery and the taint of that legacy on race relations. It is a hard, harrowing look at one of the most shameful events in American history. The main character, Sethe, has what appears to be a choke cherry tree growing and blossoming on her back. Sometimes this tree appears beautiful, rendered, as it is, like a delicate punning on the flesh. However, what the reader learns is that the tree is actually the mangled pattern of the ridges and furrows of scar tissue. During her enslavement, Sethe receives a severe beating while she is also six months pregnant. Her wounds become infected and inflamed, and she bears this mark of slavery on her back forever. So on the one hand, the tree is a negative image, a constant reminder to Sethe and the reader of the torture and brutality of slavery. And yet at the same time, the image of a blossoming choke cherry tree is meant to be beautiful. I think Morrison gives us this paradox for a reason. To suffer is to be Christ-like. One of the greatest mysteries of Christianity as a religion is that our God neither explains nor ends human suffering; rather, he takes it upon himself when he dies on the Cross.

The image of a tree appears in Isaiah 11:1-6 as a positive symbol of hope. Isaiah tells us that although the family tree of Jesse has been cut down, leaving only a withered stump, a new shoot will bud forth and restore seven surpasses—the trees that were cut down. This is a beautiful image, a constant reminder to Sethe and the reader of the torture and brutality of slavery. And yet at the same time, the image of a blossoming choke cherry tree is meant to be beautiful. I think Morrison gives us this paradox for a reason. To suffer is to be Christ-like. One of the greatest mysteries of Christianity as a religion is that our God neither explains nor ends human suffering; rather, he takes it upon himself when he dies on the Cross.

Last week the Student Government voted to support the Inter-Fraternity Council's ban on glass alcoholic beverage containers. This ban began last year in the spring, however, adopting and abiding by this ban has been slim to none. In addition, the Student Government expanded this ban so that it will cover the entire campus. This ban is important to every one. Many of us have heard of other campus's bans on glass containers and many of us have heard of friends who have fallen on broken glass, off campus, in parking lots and suffered significant physical harm. Fines and other enforcement techniques for violating this ban on campus are still being investigated. If you have any suggestions in these areas please feel free to contact any member of the IFC or SGA. This action is important for the campus but also it is the first legislative action taken in partnership between the IFC and SGA in many years. The Student Government looks forward to more joint legislative actions with social/Greek groups.

The 24-hour computer lab opened Dec. 5, 1999. The Technology Committee of the SGA worked hard with campus administrators to make this possible. Particularly the Technology Committee of the SGA and the SGA as a whole would like to thank Dr. Bill Yarbrough and Mr. Larry Mullhall for their direction, investment, and implementation of this new 24-hour lab. Even though the SGA has helped bring about the 24-hour lab, we discourage procrastination but know full well that we will probably be on your right or left when you are putting the final touches on that paper at 3 a.m. Please do not abuse the 24-hour lab or its safety features or bring that hot cup of coffee into the lab—these are just some of the situations that will cause its closing.

The Student Government is gearing up for an exciting spring. The SGA is still committed to finishing our remaining objectives and several programs. However, the success of the fall will enable us to have some time to rewrite our by-laws, reorganize the organization and make fundamental changes to catch the organization up to Student Governments at other institutions. Particular areas of focus will be representation and job descriptions/requirements and incorporating development such as the Organizational Contract and the Student Government Finance Committee. Good luck on exams.

Letter to the Editor

I felt that I should write a letter to help clear up some issues the Inter-Fraternity Council is dealing with. Unfortunately we have moved into an area of carelessness that compromises the safety of everyone at PC. The IFC decided a year ago to eliminate glass bottles from fraternity court, but for whatever reason the policy was incorrectly implemented and the result is obvious. Amidst the crowds of students on the weekend, broken glass clutters the sidewalks and streets and poses a risk to anyone around. In an effort to help ease the problem, the SGA and IFC are currently in the process of beginning a campaign to deter students from bringing glass containers to the court.

PC has been very fortunate not to have had any serious accidents resulting from glass. The important issue at hand right now is how to avoid implementing this decision again. We are starting by asking all students to not purchase bottled beer. Effective immediately, fraternity members will be in charge of keeping bottles out of their respective houses. In other words, students will be asked to pour their drink in a plastic cup in order to enter a house. Also, fraternities will be fined significantly for having broken glass on their premises. We know this seems like a lot to ask, however, it must be done.

Please be respectful to the houses you attend. Fraternities pay a lot of money for insurance to have great parties for the students. One accident is all it takes to hinder that luxury. The administration of the school (aka, Dr. Griffith and Dean Nixon) are in full support of this policy and will be very active in the implementation of it.

Fight over Inklings facility ongoing

by Tara Sluder
Staff Writer

Several weeks ago, former directors of Inklings coffee house met with college administrators to express concerns about the use of the facility in the basement of Georgia Hall—a concern that had plagued college officials since the beginning of the fall semester.

Four years ago a few students transformed the basement of Georgia Hall into a coffee house. From there, what we know as Inklings had its beginnings as a place to get freshly brewed coffee, study and socialize. Completely student-run Inklings was open on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights from 7 p.m. until midnight.

Over the 1998 Christmas holidays, Inklings relocated to Calhoun's, a house on campus that more conveniently facilitated the needs of a student-run coffee-house hang-out. The doors were open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Over the summer months, however, student publications of the moved into Calhoun's as a result of the expansion of the SGA office in Spring, displacing the student-run center. Meanwhile, Inklings was left vacant after the move of the coffee house. Looking for a place to meet, the Baptist Student Union, after consulting Dean of Students Joseph Nixon, declined and repainted the facility at the end of the summer.

Upon arriving without a place to meet, the staff of Calhoun's sought to relocate back into the old Inklings site but were surprised and somewhat appalled by the drastic changes that had been made to the room.

Apparently BSL took over Inklings during the summer and completely repainted it without consulting anyone first, said senior Patti Carson. "Some of the paintings on the walls were done by students up to fifteen years ago."

BSU President John Paul Sellars, however, assures that his organization did go to the Dean with their request to use and repaint Inklings and did, indeed, receive permission to utilize and repaint the facility.

"At the end of last semester, BSU was looking for a place to hold our weekly meetings, and Inklings was one of the suggestions that was made to us," said Sellars. "I personally went to Dean Nixon to request the use of the basement of Georgia, and after going through a lot of different people himself, Dean Nixon granted us permission to use and repaint Inklings. We were told by him that the facility would not be exclusively ours, but that other Christian organizations would be allowed to meet down there as well."

Up until last week, the basement was being used by both BSL and the staff of "Ties and Thrifts" as a weekly meeting place. Last week, however, BSU decided to relocate back to Crossroads in Douglas House.

We decided as a group to move back to Crossroads in order to give organizations that need the larger facility the opportunity to utilize it in the best way possible," said Sellars.

BSU will continue to meet on Thursday nights at 9:00 in Crossroads.

As expressed by Roland Bullard, RD of Georgia Hall, the facility remains open to any organization that would like to meet down there.

Inklings is open to any organization that cares to meet down there," said Bullard. "Because BSU was using it, some groups that aren't Christian affiliated felt uncomfortable using it and vice versa, but I will schedule in a time for anyone who wants to use it."

While sharing the use of the facility is no longer a real problem, there remains controversy about the painting over of students' art on the walls in Inklings. Some students express their dismay at the actions taken by BSU.

It really confuses me as to why they wanted to completely change a place on campus to accommodate their idea of an appropriate place to meet when there were other places that already had what they were looking for," said senior Cliff McKinney.

Officers of BSU continue to assert, however, that they went through the proper procedures to get permission for the actions that they took. In addition, they express that they never had intentions of monopolizing the use of Inklings.

After being told that we could paint, we assumed everything had been cleared and taken care of," said Sellars. "There was no harm intended as far as destruction of property is concerned. We wanted other organizations to feel free to meet down there as well. My main concern now is that it stay in good condition and that it is used in the most beneficial way possible to better campus life."

In response to the controversy over the painting done in Inklings, art professor Mark Anderson will be speaking on art and religion at a BSU meeting next semester.

A group of students have proposed plans for another place on campus with a coffee-house atmosphere similar to the one fostered by Inklings. Meetings are being held to discuss the proposals.

"We are working with Dr. Griffith and others to try and start a place on campus that would serve as an alternative to the Greek scene for students," said McKinney. "We want to create another place with an Inklings-like atmosphere that sponsors a grass roots support for the fine arts."

Dean Nixon has made a recommendation to reestablish Inklings in the basement of Georgia. The proposal is currently under consideration, but no final word has been made yet.

Students are urged to voice their concerns and opinions regarding the issues surrounding Inklings and the proposal to create a new student-run coffeehouse.

PC IN BRIEF

Judicial Council acquits student on cheating charge

The Judicial Council convened on Monday, Nov. 1, 1999 at 6:00 p.m. to hear an Honor Code case. The charge of cheating was read to the defendant. The defense entered a plea of not guilty.

The prosecution began by entering a brief statement and presenting evidence. The prosecution called one witness to testify to the charges being brought. The defense then cross-examined the witness, and the Council asked some questions for clarification.

The trial then moved to the defensive side of the case. The defendant took the stand in her own defense. The defense brought in character witnesses in support of the defendant, including some close friends and a member of the athletic department. The professor of the course in which the incident allegedly occurred also took the stand for the defense. None of the defense witnesses were cross-examined by the prosecution, but some were questioned by the Council.

The defense and prosecution made their closing statements, and the Council afterwards went into deliberation.

The Council returned with a verdict of not guilty. Findings of innocence may not be appealed.

Fraternity Christmas parties to be closed, decides IFC

During the weekend of Dec. 10 and 11 the fraternities will be hosting their annual Christmas parties. The Inter-Fraternity Council voted to make the parties closed to each individual house and their respective members and guests. The IFC requests that their decision be respected and that students note that the IFC and PC will no longer allow glass bottles in Fraternity Court and on the PC campus.

Former Delta CEO named chairman of Board of Trustees

Last month the Board of Trustees of Presbyterian College elected Ronald W. Allen, former chairman of the board, president and CEO of Delta Air Lines, as the new chairman of the Board of Trustees.

A native of Atlanta, Ga., Allen has been a trustee at PC since 1986, having served as chairman of the Student Activities Committee and, later, as chairman of the nominating committee. He is an elder at Peachtree Presbyterian Church, where former chairman Dr. Frank Harrington was senior minister until his death on Mar. 3 of this year.

POINT

Confederate battle flag should be removed from statehouse as matter of principle

At this season of the year in which we celebrate the birth of the Christ, "in whom there is neither Greek nor Jew, male nor female, slave nor free," it is appropriate that the PC community has taken a stand on one of the most divisive issues in South Carolina—the Confederate battle flag flying from the statehouse in Columbia. For this reason, we at the "Blue Stocking" applaud the faculty for their support of a resolution calling for the flag's removal and the SGA for their decision (albeit a belated one) to follow suit.

Symbols mean different things to different people. We recognize that many South Carolinians hold the flag dearly in their hearts as a symbol of the struggles of their ancestors, and we in no way wish to trample upon the memory of those who sacrificed for their families and state during the Civil War. At the same time, however, we recognize that many South Carolinians consider the flag to be a hateful symbol of racism and oppression. The lesson of the Civil War for us today is that, as Lincoln quoted Christ during the struggle, "a house divided against itself cannot stand." Quite frankly, the controversy over the Confederate battle flag has divided South Carolinians for too long, and it's high time that the state put this controversy behind it and remove the flag from the statehouse.

We are somewhat concerned, however, that, should the flag be removed from the statehouse (as we believe it ultimately will be), the motive for its removal will be based not upon the high ideals and principles embraced by the faculty and the SGA, but upon concerns about economic prudence. It has been said that there is nothing worse than doing the right thing for the wrong reason. We at the "Blue Stocking," therefore, urge all members of the Presbyterian College community and the larger South Carolina community to examine their principles and values and to act accordingly.

Kudos to admin for hearing student concerns

Two issue ago we asked College administrators to offer more performance CEPs that do not cost admission fees. Apparently administrators have listened to our concerns, and the College provided students with complementary tickets for the "Behold, A Son" Christmas concert last weekend. Two thumbs up to the administration for their willingness to listen to students' concerns.

former glory. Isaiah, of course, anticipates the Messiah. For Christians, Jesus Christ is this Messiah, and his birth did indeed change the shape of the world. Christianity is perhaps unique among the world's religions in that our God is not born to nobility. He doesn't come from power, he doesn't have wealth; rather, his humble birth suggests exactly the opposite. Rising out of nothing, he will be "King of all Kings" and the standard bearer for human justice. Equal justice for the lowest and the poorest and the weakest remains, in Isaiah, the major concern of the Messiah King.

So then, where does that leave you and me? If we are truly able to accept one of Jesus' most challenging invitations, his call for each and every one of us to be Christ-like, then surely we too must strive conscientiously for social justice.

I believe that one of the greatest challenges that faces the Presbyterian College community at the close of this century is our profound lack of diversity. Have we made ourselves comfortable and secure by excluding others? If so, then we have failed to bring about social justice. Surely this must be a community of faith where all are made to feel both welcome and accepted. It is one of my most fervent hopes that we each open our hearts, fight our personal fears and dogmas and find the courage to make the necessary changes to achieve the justice embodied by Christ Jesus.

Exchange students soon to Finnish semester at PC

by Honey Smith
Staff Writer

Part of the "PC experience" is getting to know people from distant places. Perhaps your roommate is from New York or the girl next to you in Spanish is from Louisiana. These states seem neighboring when compared to Turku, Finland.

This past semester, three exchange students from Abo Academy in Turku, Elin Fellman, Maria Markula and Kristina Lindstrom, traversed the Atlantic Ocean to bring something to the PC experience, and, as they prepare to depart, hopefully take something back.

When asked to comment upon what they enjoyed the most about PC, the unanimous reply was "the people."

"The teachers are so personal and understanding," said Markula. "I feel as though I am taking a lot back with me."

While Markula enjoyed academic life on campus, Fellman enjoyed the social life.

"The people here are just so nice," said Fellman. "Living on campus has been like being part of a tribe."

Even though they enjoyed GDH, it was also unanimous that nothing compared to "mom's cooking." Fellman thought that the free and easy access to Springs weight room was something everyone should take advantage of.

"I even thought the tornado was cool," said Lindstrom, who got her kicks from ROTC's early morning runs. "St. Pushing was my inspiration."

Though Clinton may appear to have it all, it is missing one thing - snow.

"I simply can't believe that it doesn't snow here," said Lindstrom. "I miss it."

Markula's only complaint was that her room in Douglas House had a faint odor to it and that it couldn't compare to her old apartment back in Finland.

Lindstrom suffered a blow to the head with an M16 from a hapless ROTC cadet and lived to tell the tale.

"Yeah, it stung, but I just thought mind over matter and finished the race," said Lindstrom.

Now as the semester draws to a close, thoughts of family and friends back home haunt the three students.

"It's just going to be so nice to see my parents again," said Lindstrom.

"I'm definitely going to miss it," said Markula.

"All in all, it's been a great time here at PC," said Fellman. "It will be sad to leave, though very nice to go home and see friends again."

Confederate flag

ducted a poll to gauge student opinion on the matter. According to Philpott, the results of the poll show that a slight majority of PC students support the removal of the flag. When asked whether the flag should be removed, 168 students responded in the affirmative, 118 in the negative. Likewise, 146 students said that they think the SGA should take a stance on the issue, while 106 said that the SGA should not take a stance. The question over whether the flag should be memorialized had a much more one-sided outcome, with 181 voting for memorialization and 83 voting against it.

This past Monday, the SGA finally took action on the issue.

"Because of a lot of factors, we felt that it would be good for SGA to take a stand," said Philpott. "We're not speaking for the students, but merely for SGA as an organization."

The SGA voted to endorse the Trinity Presbyterian resolution by silent ballot. Philpott would not reveal the number count of the vote.

Templeton Foundation honors PC for character building

Presbyterian College has been recognized for leadership in the field of student character development in "The Templeton Guide: Colleges That Encourage Character Development," a guidebook released nationally on Oct. 22.

PC and Furman were the only South Carolina institutions selected for the Templeton Honor Roll. PC was the only South Carolina school cited for its academic honesty programs and senior year programs.

Presbyterian College's strong commitment to character development and strength of its program make it a model for colleges and universities nationwide, said Arthur J. Schwartz, director of character development programs at the John Templeton Foundation. "With the Templeton Guide, we hope to help prospective college students and their parents who want to know what colleges are doing to promote the core values of honesty, self-control, respect, and service to those less fortunate. The Templeton Guide identifies colleges that encourage students to understand the importance of personal and civic responsibility, which will help them succeed in college and beyond. Presbyterian College's work in this area is most impressive."

In selecting Presbyterian College as one of its 100 colleges and universities on the Templeton Honor Roll, the John Templeton Foundation praised the college for its academic honesty, strong faculty and curriculum, volunteer service, and opportunities for spiritual growth, four important components of campus life.

Presbyterian championed character education that develops the entire person, offering character formation in both academic and volunteer service. For Presbyterian College graduates, how they make their life is more important than how they make a living, the Templeton profile states.

The college's honor code, enforced jointly by students and faculty, earned it a spot among the academic honesty programs listed in "The Templeton Guide."

Among the senior programs highlighted in the book is PC's "Strategies for seniors" class. Designed and implemented by the college's office of career services, the 10-week mini course offers support and guidance for seniors through personality testing and weekly sessions that cover such topics as decision making, preparing for graduate school, preparing for graduate school, preparing for job interviews, and financial planning.

Reese known for his service, love of outdoors

by Scott Moore
Staff Writer

The name William Reese has a familiar ring to it around the PC campus. If you were to go into the computer lab early in the mornings, you would probably see William in there, because he has been the computer lab manager for the past two years.

A chemistry major and biology minor, Reese plans to pursue a career in medicine and is spending his senior year at PC sending out applications to medical schools. He wants to be a primary care physician—a pediatrician or an internist, for example. He has sent out applications to the Medical University of South Carolina, University of Virginia School of Medicine and University of South Carolina School of Medicine.

"I've always enjoyed helping other people solve problems and healing the pain of others," said Reese.

Reese thinks that he can apply the problem-solving skills that he has learned in his chemistry and biology classes to help relieve the suffering of others.

"My favorite class at PC was a seminar by Dr. Porter, a visiting professor from Davidson College, on Medicine and Literature," said Reese. "It gave me a new perspective on medicine."

Reese said that when he graduates from PC he will never forget the time spent and relationships with his professors and the other students. Reese said that his favorite moment while he has been at PC was when he attended the Winter Conference Retreat because he really enjoyed having a weekend away from school and being able to think.

The quotations that mean the most to Reese, he said, are, "Do unto others, what you would have them do unto you," and "Dum Vivimus Servimus." These quotations define Reese's actions because he has truly been active in and around the PC community.

Reese is an Eagle Scout and is co-coordinator of the SVS (Thomwell) Cub Scout Program with Ashley Greer. He is the president of both Omicron Delta Kappa Leadership Society and the Sigma Kappa Alpha Scholarship Society. He is also on the Judicial Council, he is a student and he is a member of AIBS

Reese considers himself a lover of the outdoors. He enjoys sailing, snow skiing, boating, fishing and hunting. He enjoys anything that is science fiction and calls himself an "Eighties Music fiend."

Reese also enjoys good humor—even if it's at his expense. "My most embarrassing moment happened at Snowshoe," said Reese. "This guy and I walked into a comedy bar and sat down. The comedian came out and opened his act with a joke about me and ended his act with a joke about me."

If Reese could give any piece of advice to PC students it would be to get involved on campus.

"Try it all out," said Reese. "Find something that you like and become a leader in that organization."

After 38 years, Roberson still part of PC family

by Mindy Powers
Campus Life Editor

After thirty-eight years in Greenville Dining Hall, Walter Roberson is a familiar face to students, faculty and staff. Although he is semi-retired, it is not surprising to see him working at a reception at Darlington House or at Greenville Dining Hall at lunchtime. Roberson began working at GDH around the time the Dining Hall was completed. He helped move food services into the present building.

Following five years in the army, Roberson came to Presbyterian College to "stay a couple of weeks and ended up staying for thirty-eight years."

Although Mr. Roberson was born in Newberry, he moved to Clinton in 1949. There have been many changes at Presbyterian College since that time, he said. There were only ten to twelve females at PC when Roberson began working here. The females were allowed to wear only skirts or dresses unless they were participating in a sports activity. In addition, all students were required to dress for meals on Sunday, at Clinton College, he has also found time for the things he considers most important: his family and his faith. He and his wife and food was served after every football and basketball game to the players and staff.

Although Roberson has devoted much of his life to Presbyterian College, he has also found time for the things he considers most important: his family and his faith. He and his wife

Amanda have five children, sixteen grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. All of the Roberson children still live in Clinton. Roberson takes care of one of the great-grandchildren and is an active participant in that child's schooling and extra-curricular activities.

Roberson is an active member of the Baptist Church and serves as a deacon. He said that his faith has helped him through the difficult times in his life and has helped him to build a strong family. His children have given time and love to care for Mrs. Roberson, who suffers from a serious illness. Their help has allowed her to recover from the illness, although she remains weak.

Since Roberson lives near PC, he is able to check on the buildings during holidays and vacations. He is also a valuable member of the staff when snow falls on Clinton. Roberson picks up the employees who cannot make it safely to campus because of the snow. Since PC is a residential campus, staff support is necessary no matter what the weather.

When asked why he stayed at Presbyterian College for so many years, Roberson responded that he "enjoy[s] working with the students and gets along with the employees well."

Handball: More than just a soccer penalty

Men's, women's handball teams end fall season strong

by Anne Sullivan
Sports Writer

When someone mentions the word handball, most people think of a penalty in a soccer game. Actually, handball is the newest club sport to hit the PC campus by storm. What exactly is handball, you ask? Handball is a fast-paced sport that takes the best of soccer and basketball and combines them into a game with lots of scoring, player contact and excitement. One goalie and six court players pass, dribble and shoot with a leather ball the size of a youth soccerball. The game of handball is not new to the rest of the world. The United States learned about this new, emerging and dynamic sport after the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta.

PC acquired a men's and women's handball team two years ago. The men's roster for this season includes Tim Hiott, Nick Navarro, Wayne Russell, Jeff Miller, Jackie Pearson, Andy Klosterman, Jono Sullivan, Paul Stender and Michael Bailey and is coached by Ed Branchi. The women's roster includes Kasey Myers, Stacey Elder, Anna Gasque, Felicia Ard, Tracy Koon, Kit Upchurch, Caroline Crawley, Murray Galoway, Melissa Wiggers and Katie Dobbins and is coached by Barbara Eves.

PC's opponents this season were Benedict College, Lander University, Newberry College and Furman University. The teams usually played each other twice during the season.

This past weekend PC headed to Columbia to play in a tournament with the women's team placing an impressive third.

"I felt the team played really well this season," said Katie Dobbins when asked about her experiences with the women's handball team this season. "We all became very close. There were lots of improvements on the team, and I am really excited about next year."

Tim Hiott summed up his feelings about playing handball.

"After playing a year of football for PC, it's a challenge to play such a different type of sport. It's been a lot of fun and has been an experience I will not soon forget," said Hiott.

Women's basketball:

Lady Blue Hose 5-0, ranked 17th

by Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

The Blue Hose women's basketball team is shooting themselves to victory after victory in their 1999-2000 season. Having won all of their first five games of the season, as well as an exhibition game against the Lowcountry All-Stars, the team is currently ranked seventeenth. Having already defeated St. Leo, Augusta State, Erskine College, Lander University and USC-Spartanburg, the Blue Hose are well on their way to an outstanding season.

The last two games have set the standard for the remainder of the season. On Nov. 27, the team travelled to Greenwood, S.C. for their match-up against Lander University. In this recent game, the unstoppable duo of sophomore forward Toni Leopard and junior center Rachel Sloan teamed up for an amazing 22 and 21 points apiece as well as 12 rebounds and four assists from Sloan. The entire team took control and put points up on the board. Tracy Woody, a junior forward for the squad, tallied an incredible 13 points and five rebounds. Guards Heather Couch and Jill Neumann, both seniors, combined their skills for 15 points, 11 assists and 11 rebounds. PC was in the lead the entire game with their aggressive offense and their tough defense. The final score was an impressive 78-63.

Four days later, the Blue Hose faced USC-Spartanburg on their home court. USCS fared no better under the brutal pressure of the Lady Blue Hose. Neumann, a senior from Chamblee, Ga., was impressive from behind the three-point line, nailing five out of 11 shots towards her season-high 18 points for the game. By halftime, PC had established their lead of 33-19 with the help of Rachel Sloan and Toni Leopard, both scoring 8 points, and sophomore center Merritt Misner, scoring an impressive seven points in only 13 minutes of playing time. Even though USCS outshot PC in their percentage of shots made to shots attempted, PC overcame that obstacle by having control of the ball for greater time. Candice Choice, a junior who gave up her position of guard for the night to play reserve forward, led the strongest attribute of the game—turnovers. Choice tallied six steals, her career high. With 16 turn-overs in the second half, PC fought their way to victory with a final score of 65-41.

The women's basketball team also finished first place winning the Horton Home Christmas Tournament on Dec. 3 and 4 in Milledgeville, Ga. The Blue Hose defeated the University of Tampa on Friday by a score of 66-54. Then, the Lady Hose defeated Ga. College and State University 80-73 in the final to win the tournament. Junior Tracy Woody was named tournament MVP while junior Rachel Sloan and sophomore Toni Leopard were named to the All-Tournament team.

The Blue Hose played their first South Atlantic Conference game on Dec. 8 against Lenoir-Rhyne College. As of press time, no stats were available. After two games over the Christmas holidays, PC will return to school ready for a full schedule of SAC games and hopefully a strong continuation of their winning season.

Men's basketball:

Men's team off to a slow start at 1-5

by Hank Coleman
Sports Editor

In the past two weeks, the Presbyterian College men's basketball team has lost five out of their last six games. The team finished the Nov. 19 and 20 Bellarmine Tip Off Classic Tournament in Louisville, Ky., with one win and one loss.

The loss came on Friday night against Augusta State University by a score of 76-71, but the team scored their only victory Saturday night against St. Andrews College 75-67 in overtime. Junior center DJ Humphries had an explosive game making 10 out of 14 shots from the field and sinking all six of his free throws for 26 points in the game, and he also had 15 rebounds, even though PC was not victorious. Freshman forward Jerry Barlow scored 17 points with eight rebounds in his college debut against Augusta State University.

In the consolation game on Saturday against St. Andrews, freshman Jeff Whittle, Chuck Rayford and Rob Isom all scored over ten points in the game to lead the Blue Hose to victory, but PC would not ride for long on their win. The very next weekend PC lost both of its games in the Peach Belt SAC Clash Tournament in Greenwood, S.C. on Nov. 26 and 27.

On Friday, PC lost to USC-Aiken 81 to 68, and they lost to Lander 71-60 that Saturday.

On November 30, PC lost to #22 ranked Georgia College and State University by a score of 66-63. A player for Georgia College and State hit a pair of clutch free throws with less than ten seconds left to play to edge out PC for the victory in NCAA Division II men's basketball action at State's Centennial Center in Milledgeville, Ga. PC guard, junior Kevin Campbell, led the Blue Hose with 15 points, while junior center DJ Humphries added 13 points and 10 rebounds of his own.

PC shot fifty percent from the floor for the game and outrebounded Georgia College and State University 35-32, but the deciding factor was turnovers. Georgia College and State University turned the ball over only nine times, while the Blue Hose men's basketball team lost the ball 21 times, committing turnovers left and right and resulting in the narrow defeat.

Presbyterian College lost to Anderson College Thursday night December 2 by a score of 65-58 in a non-conference basketball game at the Abney Athletic Center in Anderson, S.C. PC's offense was led by junior guard Kevin Campbell with 17 points and freshman guard Jeff Whittle with 12 points. PC led 34-28 at halftime only to relinquish the lead when the Anderson College Trojans had a 11-2 run. PC would never retake the lead again in the game. Anderson College outrebounded the Blue Hose 36-28 and shot 54 percent from the floor, as opposed to only 36 percent from PC's team. The Trojans scored 40 points to Presbyterian College's eight in the lane, giving the Blue Hose another defeat. The loss was PC's fourth in a row, and the Blue Hose's record drops to a dismal 1-5.

Equestrian Club gallops toward victory

by Mindy Powers
Campus Life Editor

For three years, Presbyterian College has offered students with a love of horses a chance to join the Equestrian Club. However, this fall marks the first year in which PC has fielded a team to compete in Equestrian competitions across South Carolina and Georgia, made ripples with its success in competitions and its growing numbers. Due to a freshman class with an intense interest in horses, PC now competes against noted schools such as Clemson, the University of Georgia and the University of South Carolina to test their riding and handling skills.

"Nobody's heard of us, and they're just getting to know who we are," said Katie Woolwine, freshman rider, of the team's first two competitions this year.

In the team's first competition on Oct. 30 at Clemson, freshman Jill Walker placed fifth, Woolwine placed sixth and freshman Tara Thompson received reserve honors. Winning reserve is akin to receiving honorable mention for a good performance. In the second competition which was held Nov. 6-7 at USC, Thompson placed fifth while Woolwine and freshman Erin Moore received reserve awards.

"Horseback is the only sport where girls and guys compete together," said Woolwine. "They're equal, but usually girls are better."

The co-captains of the team are Woolwine and Moore. Equestrian competitions are also the only competitions in which schools do not compete as a team. Each person competes individually and is awarded points for performances. At the end of the season, points are tallied. Competitors are judged on how they handle their horses in riding and jumping. Because the participants have never ridden the horses on which they compete until the day of competition, only the riders are judged - not the caliber of horse.

Freshman Katie Woolwine jumps fence at an Equestrian Club competition

According to president of the Equestrian Club, Jessica Setzer, the team and the club are inseparable. Competitions and practices are organized by the club and the team's coach, Cindy Paul. Joining the club costs $25. The club meets every other Thursday at 7:00 p.m. in Springs 202. Their next meeting is Dec. 2.

Members of the club also assert that the club thus far has only female membership.

"Who wouldn't want to be in a group of cute girls in tight pants and tall black leather boots?" added one member of the club who wished to remain unnamed.

The school pays for weekly practices and competitions for the team.

"We have a lot of private donations from alumni," said Setzer. "We also sold two horses. We are getting ready to do fundraisers. We get money from the school because it's an NCAA sport."

"I'm glad PC has a team because I've been riding since I was seven years old," said Walker. "The team is a way for me to continue practicing what I love to do."

"I think it adds to the whole PC experience," said Setzer. "It gives people a chance to do something they've never done before. To compete is something new and fun."

"[The team] is a chance to compete for a team," said Woolwine. "I've been riding all my life for myself and it's more enjoyable and rewarding to compete on or for a team."

The only remaining competition for this semester is in December at the University of Georgia. The team welcomes any support or additional club members and riders. Also, check out the team at the PC website on the athletics page.

Task Force proposes Carrol International House to be co-ed, awaits Board approval

by Tara Sluder
Staff Writer

Last spring, work began on Carol International House (CIH), the first "living/learning" facility on the PC campus. While construction workers have been hard at work creating the facility, a 33-member task force has been operating behind the scenes to develop a proposal that is currently under the final stages of approval.

The task force, a team of students, faculty and staff appointed by Dr. Griffith, worked together throughout the fall semester to decide on issues such as programming, interior design, technology and resident selection for CIH. The team's statement of purpose asserts that "Carol International House serves to engage the Presbyterian College community in experiencing, understanding and celebrating world cultures."

The proposed plans for CIH include living spaces for 33 students, including 24 rising sophomores, junior or senior students, seven international students and two resident assistants (one male and one female). As it stands, the residence facility will house both male and female students, rendering it the first co-ed residential facility on the PC campus.

"The proposal is for CIH to be co-ed," said Susan Masson, RD of Clinton Hall and graduate assistant for study abroad and international students. "The proposal, of course, is still pending on the ultimate approval of the board, but we don't foresee any problems."

"I have looked at studies that show that co-ed residence halls on college campuses actually lower damage and encourage students to keep their rooms nicer," added senior Bob Hill, an RA on first floor Georgia and task force member. "There are also a lot less problems as a result of the brotherly/sisterly feelings that develop from this type of housing."

The layout of CIH is unlike any other facility on campus. A "loft" lounge on the second floor will overlook the large central lobby on the first floor. The facility will also be equipped with a kitchen, a state-of-the-art classroom and office space for the director of international study and programs.

"As part of the proposal, there will be special international programs that will serve to foster cultural awareness, prepare PC students who wish to study abroad, provide an easier transition period for those students returning from studying abroad and make international students on campus feel a little more at home," said Masson. "It is really important for students to have an international background, and we hope that CIH will encourage that."

Masson, a member of the task force, is also the interim coordinator of the program, and one of her first duties will be related to the selection of students to reside in CIH.

Resident selection will be based on a two-part application process. Students interested in living in CIH will be required to complete an essay application, which a committee of faculty, students and residence life staff will review. The committee will then interview students and make the final selection by April 1. Applications for residence will be available soon.

Construction of CIH continues

Winter Wonderland

Covered by a layer of ice and snow, the campus of Presbyterian College was in rare form after winter storms blasted the Upstate of South Carolina early last week. While the winter weather gave PC students a day off of classes to sled, build snowmen and participate in huge snowball fights on the East Plaza, many tree branches and power lines fell from the weight of snow and ice, resulting in a loss of power on part of the PC campus and most of Clinton Monday night. A few buildings on campus, including the "Blue Stocking" office were without power for over 48 hours.

Community the theme for Winter Conference 2000

by Jack Carmody
Staff Writer

For thirty years now PC students, faculty and staff alike have been spending a weekend in January together at the YMCA Blue Ridge Center in Black Mountain, N.C. Winter Conference was started by former faculty member Dr. Jack Presseau and former Chaplain Bob Piephoff to deal tensions between different student organizations. The conference also provides people with a chance to get to know each other and to grow spiritually.

"Winter Conference gave me a chance to evaluate where I stood in life, in addition to meeting people from all walks of life," said senior Jonathan Todd of the retreat.

Because of the past two week's inclement weather, the event's organizers moved this year's Conference from Black Mountain to the PC campus. Nevertheless, the weekend was still jam-packed with activities, including plenty of music and the College's Spirit Week activities. On Sunday morning a worship service was also held.

While many students were disappointed that the retreat was moved from Black Mountain, there were some advantages to holding the retreat of campus: some students who did not have had a chance to leave campus for the weekend were able to participate in some of the retreat events and still cheer on the Blue Hose at this weekend's Spirit Week basketball games.

mittee of the Board of Trustees, the proposal was presented to the faculty at their meeting on January 27. (The decision on the proposal was not available at press time). The full Board of Trustees will review the proposal in February.

Both students and faculty expressed excitement and curiosity regarding the new facility. Dr. Mark Cox, assistant professor of Spanish and member of the task force, has high hopes for CIH.

"Carrol International House is going to show that PC values cultural diversity and globalization on our campus," said Cox. "It's going to give us an opportunity to learn more about other cultures as well as our own."

Some students expressed appreciation for the purpose of CIH as well as the hard work and planning that has gone into the facility, but many were disappointed at the small number of residents that it will be able to accommodate.

"I think that the motive behind CIH to promote cultural awareness and diversity is great, but, at the same time, I think it is a shame that only 33 students will benefit from this wonderful new facility," said Matt Wiggins, sophomore and RA on third floor Georgia. "A lot of money was spent on CIH that could have gone to making much-needed renovations to the larger residence facilities on campus."

The opening of CIH promises to be an exciting event for PC. Students, faculty and staff have invested a lot of time and effort into the project in order to make CIH a one-of-a-kind educational/residential facility.

"I am very pleased by the work the faculty, students and staff who assisted me during the fall semester in designing the program and the interior furnishings of CIH," said Dr. Griffith. "It will be a unique facility for PC."

This year's theme for Winter Conference was "Creating and Celebrating Community." Diversity was the major goal and point of discussion for the retreat. The idea was to have every student organization represented at the retreat, as well as a fair number of faculty and staff members. Several discussion groups were planned for Saturday afternoon to elaborate on this issue. These groups talked about how to make the PC campus closer and more diverse. They also addressed the recent diversity study done by Project Understanding as part of the college's strategic plan. Project Understanding was formed by President John V. Griffith as a way of handling diversity issues on campus.

"My hope is that the weekend will become an occasion for the PC community to appreciate and enjoy what we have as a community and envision ways of making our community more welcoming and inviting for all people," said Dr. Greg Henley, College chaplain and member of Project Understanding, whose office sponsors the annual event.

Co-sponsoring the retreat this year with the Chaplain's Office was Project Understanding. The Thomas E. Staley Foundation asked Carol Lakey Hess to be the keynote speaker. Hess is an accomplished Christian educator, writer and minister. She is the former assistant professor of Christian Education at Princeton Theological Seminary in Princeton, N.J. She has also written several books, including her latest, "Caretakers of Our Common House," which deals with women's roles in the church. Hess also spoke in a special convocation on Monday, Jan. 31 in Belk Auditorium.

MLK celebration concludes with Dr. Oliver's convocation address

by Doodle Harris

On Monday, January 17, no students crawled out of bed for their dreaded 8:00 classes. No faculty hurriedly wrote lesson plans or rushed to grade papers on the night before.

For the first time Presbyterian College gave its students and faculty the holiday to celebrate the birth of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., perhaps the greatest single leader of the civil rights movement in America.

"Well, let's say that PC has not been a leader in this," said Dave Gillespie, vice-president for academic affairs. "I suspect that you would find most of the colleges and universities in South Carolina have been observing it for some time. I am sure that all PC students know of the importance of Dr. King and his legacy, and that they know of Project Understanding and of PC's commitment to diversity."

Gillespie also assures everyone that the holiday has nothing to do with the fact that PC classes started on a Friday instead of the traditional Tuesday beginning date.

In celebration of the holiday, PC joined Laurens County in several activities promoting awareness of civil rights and King's work. At 10:00 a.m. on Saturday, Jan. 15 Laurens County held a parade and activities continued throughout the day at Sanders Elementary School. Saturday night saw the annual Freedom Fund Banquet hosted by the Laurens County NAACP. Monday night, a candlelight service was held on the steps of Neville Hall.

To conclude the celebration, Dr. Lomnie Oliver, a native of Hampton, Va., was invited to speak at convocation in Edmunds Hall. After a performance by the Student Fellowship Choir, directed by senior Adrienne Sarritt, Oliver, a member of the Board of Trustees for PC and pastor of New Life Presbyterian Church in Atlanta, Ga., spoke on the theme of "Redeeming Our Quest for Community."

"Unless we deal with racism, there can be no true community," Oliver told a full audience at Edmunds Hall. "The faculty, staff and students of Presbyterian College must take up their cross and be innovative and creative. God challenges us to perform an anti-racism role in their work and society."

Oliver outlined four steps each person could take to end racism in today's society. His four recommendations included asking if the actions we are taking reflect the dream we want to live, affirming that blackness is a gift, using small group interaction to realize that everyone is God's gift to the world and including multi-cultural studies in educational curricula.

"Racism alive and well here in Clinton, S.C. in the year 2000 at Presbyterian College?" Oliver rhetorically challenged the captive audience. He ended the convocation by asking everyone present to stand up and sing "We Shall Overcome."

Markham shoots for goals on and off the field

Legs and arms in perpetual motion... feet and eyes in constant coordination... with grace and agility she moved across the PC soccer field as well as this "field" of her life.

Karen Markham, a senior from Columbia, S.C. is known for her selections to Regional and All-Conference women's soccer teams as well as her Player of the Week status, but there is more to this young athlete: there exists a woman with a goal.

Part of this goal of higher education and growth, however, has indeed been being a part of her "PC family," otherwise known as the PC women's soccer team.

"It's been really nice [to be a part of the team]," said Markham. "We have a really close team. It's been a lot of fun."

With this level of encouragement and love, there can be no question that her involvement with the women's soccer team has influenced all of the successes Karen has had on and off the field.

Markham, a psychology major, said that being a part of the team will be what she misses most about PC when she graduates in May, but that, after four years of hard work and dedication, she is ready to move on. She also said, though, that the determination behind achieving so much success as a soccer player helped her to become more prepared for the obstacles she faced in achieving the psychology degree she desired. Just like those teammates who helped her to do her best on the field, Markham said that it was the psychology professors, such as Dr. Tim Gaines's, rooting for her while in the classroom that really made her realize the potential for success.

And the success Karen has experienced while a PC student has helped her not only to grow, but to be better

Similarly, the supportive teammates she has encountered, as well as friends like Jill Neumann and Christina McRae (to whom Markham said she owes all of her success), will be a much appreciated source of encouragement when Markham someday works with young children with speech problems. Markham said that feeling the love from these supportive people will help her to act as a support system for the young people she hopes to help one day.

Markham's appreciation for her time here at PC is extremely evident. She said that right now she is appreciating some much-needed down time to go mountain biking and to spend time with friends.

she is currently accompanying.

"I think Dr. Buckland is a wonderful asset to this music department," said York. "I'm incredibly excited about getting the opportunity to work with her [to prepare] my junior recital."

Discovering how the learning process works and observing how the process develops in others and herself peaked her interest in Piano Pedagogy. She enjoys learning music, playing the piano and collaborating with people.

"Accompanying and teaching are extensions of my creative side," said Buckland. "My biggest joy of teaching is being able to share my knowledge of music and of the piano with others and receiving their insights. Accompanying allows me to put into practice what I teach. With each accompaniment and student, I'm continuously growing as a musician."

When not in the practice room or on the recital stage, the most common place to find Buckland is in her car. Her nonmusical hobbies include cooking, reading, hiking and target shooting. Her future goals include owning a Steinway grand piano, a fortepiano and a full-time college position. Her two favorite quotations are "Live your beliefs and you can turn the world around (Henry David Thoreau)" and "The secret of success is making your vocation your vacation (Mark Twain)." She lives in Columbia with her husband and their kitten, Briar.

"I think we would all agree it's been a tremendous boon to the choir to have a full time accompanist," said Dr. Orval Oleson, Music Department Chair. "We're all appreciative for her willingness to step in and do whatever needs to be done. She has a great attitude and is a team player."

Dr. Buckland has even been known to eat lunch as late as 3:00 p.m. in preparation for non-stop rehearsals from 3:30 until 9:00 p.m.

"Learning and teaching music can be hard work but I cannot think of anything more rewarding," said Buckland. "For me, teaching and accompanying will be a lifetime endeavor with many fulfilling and inspiring moments."

Lady Blue Hose keep winning streak alive with victories over Tusculum, Newberry, Lenoir-Rhyne Ranked number-seven in the nation in NCAA Division II, Presbyterian College women's basketball tied a South Atlantic Conference record with their seventeenth victory in a row since the start of the season, defeating host Tusculum College, 68-64, on a snowy Saturday afternoon, Jan. 22, at Alpine Arena in Greeneville, Tenn. The Blue Hose equaled the mark set by Wingate University, which won 17 consecutive games in the 1991-92 season. With this victory, the women's basketball team had won 21 straight regular-season games dating back to the 1998-99 season through the current season. This victory marked the second week in a row that the Blue Hose were ranked in the top seven. PC has been ranked every week of the 1999-2000 season.

Junior forward Tracy Woody recorded 15 points on six-of-nine shooting, while sophomore forward Toni Leopard added 13 points as the Blue Hose (17-0) increase their hold on SAC race, improving to 7-0 in the conference. Junior center Rachel Sloan scored eight points, pulled down seven rebounds, and made five steals, while senior guard Jill Neumann added eight points and a game-best five assists.

The Pioneers (3-12, 0-7 SAC) kept it close for most of the first half, which saw eight ties as the Blue Hose held a 27-21 lead at the break. In the second period, TC scored the first basket on a Natasha Jones' layup to cut the deficit to 27-23, but PC used a 7-0 run, including Woody's jumper with 16:45 left, to make it 34-23.

The Pioneers got back-to-back baskets by Jones and senior guard Jennifer Szamier to get within seven at 34-27 at the 15:27 mark. But the Blue Hose went on a 13-2 spurt over the next 7:40 to lead 47-29. TC refused to go away, using an 8-0 run, including sophomore forward Kristen New's free throw with 6:00 remaining cut the lead to 47-37. But that's as close as the Pioneers would get as PC finished the contest on a 21-11 string, sending TC to their sixth loss in a row.

The Blue Hose shot 26-for-30 from the free-throw line, including 11-for-12 in the first half alone, while TC shot just 6-for-11 at the foul line for the entire game.

A few days later, the Lady Blue Hose kept the winning streak alive, as Leopard completed her second double-double of the season—with 16 points and 10 rebounds—to lead the Lady Blue Hose to its eighteenth consecutive win this season in defeating Newberry College, 89-48, last Wednesday night in Templeton Center.

PC, which held the Indians to only 26 percent shooting from the field, took control of the game at the tip and never looked back.

Neumann scored 13 of her 15 points in the first half while dishing out four assists and pulling away three steals.

The Blue Hose began the second half with a 17-point lead. An early Indian basket pulled Newberry within 15, but that would be as close as the Indians would get.

Including Leopard and Neumann, five Blue Hose players finished the game in double figures. Junior forward Rachel Sloan finished the game with 14 points and six rebounds, while sophomore forward Janet Vicks and sophomore guard Katie B. Davis finished with 10 and 11 points, respectively.

The Blue Hose improved to 18-0 overall and 8-0 in the SAC. Along with their consecutive win streak for the season, the Blue Hose also extend their home winning streak to 24 and their conference home winning streak to 15—a streak dating back to the 1996-97 season.

The Lady Blue Hose continued their winning streak this past Saturday with a 79-75 victory SAC rival Lenoir-Rhyne for the second basketball game of Spirit Week. As of press time, no stats were available.

While athletic fields freeze over, indoor intramurals heat up

by Amy Kukla
Sports Writer

If you would like a little friendly competition against your fellow Blue Hose students, a chance to call your friends "the thugs" or a chance to receive one of those famous Intramural Champions t-shirts, then you should join the everlasting excitement of the PC intramurals! All students can participate in intramurals whether they were high school superstars without enough time to play for a College varsity team or they are just looking for another extracurricular activity.

"It's a fun way to get exercise and also bond with your teammates at the same time," said Ruthanna Blake, a sophomore who has participated in many intramural sports.

A wide variety of intramural sports are offered at PC for all of the Blue Hose intramural athletes. Students can choose from softball, football, golf, ping pong, pool, frisbee, golf, tennis, volleyball, basketball, indoor soccer and outdoor soccer.

Currently, even with the icy and windy weather outside, soccer players are battling it out in the Springs Campus Center gym in the indoor soccer tournament. As of last Tuesday, semifinalists for the Men's A League included Team SMO of Theta Chi Fraternity, the Oysters of Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity, the Kickers and Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity. Semifinalists for the Women's A League included the Support Hose (faculty and staff), the Thugs, Zeta Tau Alpha Sorority and Alpha Delta Pi Sorority. Finals were held last Wednesday night. Team SMO won the Men's A League championship with a 4-2 victory over the Oysters. The Thugs won the Women's A League title with a 3-2 victory over the Support Hose.

"In many ways, intramural sports are like the Special Olympics because everyone plays mainly for enjoyment and not solely for competition," said senior Ed Bianchi, who helps coordinate the intramurals program.

The next intramural sport offered is basketball, the most intense and popular of PC's intramurals. Basketball intramurals span the month of February and attract the highest number of competitors. Last Wednesday, as part of PC's Spirit Week celebration, the intramurals program hosted a three-point shooting contest followed by a slam dunk contest during half time of the men's and women's games. This past weekend, intramurals hosted a three-on-three tournament. Preliminary rounds were held in the Springs gymnasium at 7:30 p.m. on Friday. The men's and women's finals were held the following night during half time of the men's and women's basketball games against Lenoir-Rhyne. As of press time, no stats were available.

Hose warmed up, hitting on 13-of-26 field goals for 50.0 percent.

The Blue Hose got to within three points at 65-62 with 21 seconds remaining, but the Indians hit on seven-of-10 free throws in the last 52 seconds to steal the win.

The difference in the game was the turnover battle, won by the Indians. Newberry forced 22 turnovers while dishing out 14 assists, while the Blue Hose forced 15 turnovers and only had 13 assists. For the game, Newberry hit 20 out of 31 free throws (64.5 percent), while PC hit 17 of 25 (68.0 percent).

Hughes led the way on eight-of-17 shooting from the field, while adding nine rebounds and eight assists. Sophomore guard Courtney Davis added 15 points and three assists, while sophomore guard Albert Garrett and junior forward Jonathan Stackhouse each added 11 points. Stackhouse grabbed nine rebounds.

For the Blue Hose, freshman forward Jeff Whittle scored a game-high 17 points and grabbed eight rebounds, while D.J. Humphries added 16 points and seven rebounds. Rayford added 14 points and two steals.

The Indians improved to 8-9 overall and 5-3 in the SAC, while the Blue Hose fell to 8-8 overall and 6-1 in the SAC.

On Saturday of last weekend, the Blue Hose took on Lenoir-Rhyne College in Templeton Gymnasium. The Blue Hose won the game in overtime, 76-67. As of press time, no stats were available.

The next home game is this Saturday, Feb. 9 against Carson-Newman College at 7:45 p.m.

Blue Hose upset Gardner-Webb, Lenoir-Rhyne, fall to Newberry

Freshmen Jeff Whittle and Chuck Rayford scored 38 points together as Presbyterian College took an 87-70 upset win over #11 Gardner-Webb University in men's South Atlantic Conference basketball action Saturday, Jan. 15 in Templeton Center.

Rayford, a freshman guard, tallied a game-high 20 points on six-of-11 shooting from the field while adding three steals. Whittle, a freshman forward, added 18 points. Junior center DJ Humphries continued his stellar play with 18 points and five rebounds on six-of-seven shooting from the field. Rounding out the double figures scorers for the Blue Hose was junior point guard Kevin Campbell, who added 15 points and five assists.

In a battle for first place in the SAC,

PC took control from the opening tip, shooting 72 percent from the field first half while holding the Bulldogs to 34.6 percent from the field at the same time. The Blue Hose took a 46-21 lead into intermission.

The second half was a mirror image of the first with PC in command. The Bulldogs cut the lead to under 20 points on several occasions, but the Blue Hose responded everytime and kept Gardner-Webb at bay, shooting 52.9 percent from the field. Presbyterian iced the game down the stretch by shooting 30-of-38 free throws, good for 78.9 percent.

For the Bulldogs, junior guard Marcus Tyree came off the bench for a team high 15 points on four-of-seven shooting from the three-point arc, while sophomore forward Bruce Fields added 10 points and four rebounds.

With its win over the Bulldogs, PC extended its winning streak to five in a row and seven of the last eight games. The Blue Hose improved to 8-6 overall and 6-0 in the SAC. The Bulldogs fell to 14-2 overall, and 4-2 in the SAC.

The Blue Hose's game against Tusculum scheduled for Monday, Jan. 24 was canceled due to inclement weather, but, after two days of stormy winter weather, the Hose had a chance to heat it up on the basketball court at a Wednesday evening game against Newberry College in Templeton Center.

Newberry's senior guard Brandon Hughes scored a game-high 27 points to lead the Indians to a 68-64 upset win over PC.

McCain begins South Carolina campaign, promises to reach out to college students

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-chief

On Wednesday, Feb. 2, 2000, only hours after scoring a surprising landslide victory in the New Hampshire Presidential primary, Arizona Senator and GOP Presidential hopeful John McCain launched his South Carolina primary campaign on the campus of Presbyterian College.

"We had a great night last night; we had a marvelous night," said McCain during a speech at the Close Arena in Springs Campus Center. "There was no one, including me, that ever believed that we could achieve a 19 percentage-point victory in the New Hampshire primary." Late on the night of February 1, over 40 PC students joined students from six other colleges and universities in South Carolina at a welcoming party for the Arizona Senator at Greenville-Spartanburg Airport. With the Blue Dogs of Charleston providing the entertainment, students welcomed the victorious candidate and his wife Cindy, who were accompanied by South Carolina Congressmen Mark Sanford and Lyndsay Graham.

"I'm going to beat Al Gore like a drum," McCain said to the cheering crowd of supporters.

The welcoming party, which ended with a shower of brightly-colored con-nexy day. With Dixieland jazz and classic rock and roll entertaining the crowds in Springs, the party atmosphere of the night before was recreated Jay Philpott and senior Adrienne Saratt, who presented McCain with a PC hat and jacket, the Senator got down to business.

"The whole reason why I'm running for President of the United States is in this room and around these balconies and that is: I want you connected to your government again," said McCain. "I'm grateful you're here, and I promise you that you will have your government back and you will be a part of the process again. And I mean that from the bottom of my heart."

Referring to his candidacy for the Presidency as a "great crusade," McCain preached his message of integrity, strong defense and government reform.

"Our victory last night gave me the megaphone, gave me the opportunity to talk to millions and millions of Americans and talk to them about how badly we need to reform, how badly we need to give the government back to the people," said McCain.

Criticizing the Clinton-Gore administration for its campaign finance scandals, McCain assured the crowd assembled in Close Arena that honesty

New Hampshire experience reaffirms faith in Presidential primary process

by Kay Owen

Presbyterian College sent 16 students and two professors on a trip of a lifetime to experience first hand the process of the New Hampshire primary, the most important presidential primary in the United States.

Political science professors Chris Grant and Dr. Booker Ingram took students in the Presidential Primaries and the Media seminar to Nashua, New Hampshire and surrounding cities for six days of meeting presidential candidates, New Hampshire citizens and members of the national media. The first two days concentrated on seeing and meeting as many as possible of the Republican and Democratic candidates. The other days were spent volunteering for campaigns and seeing the voting process in action.

January 28, 2000: Friday we left campus at 10:30am en route to Charlotte to catch our plane to Pittsburg, then on to Manchester, N.H. The day was consumed by travel, so the real action began the next morning, after getting settled into our hotel and getting a general idea of our surroundings.

January 29, 2000: We began Saturday by going to Women for Bradley rally at the Manchester YWCA. It was our first look at the difference between seeing candidates on TV and hearing them speak in person. We were somewhat surprised at the large amount of media coverage at such a relatively small event. Nonetheless, reporters present were from BBC and other distant locations.

From the Bradley rally we headed for Franklin, N.H. where we would greet Alan Keyes as he worked storefront to storefront answering questions and soliciting votes. We were fortunate enough to be able to personally greet Keyes and have some photographs made with him. We followed him to Franklin City Hall where he held a press conference with local and national media as well as Franklin citizens. Later we would find that our time with Keyes was aired on C-SPAN and CNN news shows.

We left Franklin and hurried to Derry, N.H. to see John McCain at the Boys and Girls Club. We walked into a packed house of people aging from five to eighty-five years. We were also amongst members of

McCain visit positive media exposure for College, chance to study politics and media firsthand

Now that the confetti has been cleared from the floor of Close Arena, the huge American flag behind the makeshift stage has been folded up, the camera crews have gone on film other locales and the novelty of seeing our campus on CNN has worn off, it is possible for us to sit back and take a long, hard and detached look at the political events that transpired at Presbyterian College last week.

We at the "Blue Stocking" thank the College's administration and faculty—particularly Mr. Chris Grant, instructor of political science—for their efforts to bring Sen. McCain to campus. While one might argue—as some PC students and faculty did—that the College was "used" by political spindoctors to stage a spectacle mostly devoid of serious discussion of policy issues, the decision of the McCain campaign to launch the Senator's South Carolina Presidential primary campaign at PC gave much to the College in return.

The event gave the College national media exposure that, we believe, will help it to recruit prospective students from areas outside the Southeast. Perhaps more importantly, the event gave PC students a chance to observe firsthand how Presidential primaries are conducted and how the news media interacts with politics. We are reminded of the yearly Arnold Symposium, which, two years ago, featured a discussion on "the Media and Politics." Like the Arnold Symposium, the McCain rally brought both the media and politics to PC. Unlike the Arnold Symposium, the news media did not tell us about politics and the media; it showed us politics and the media.

We at the "Blue Stocking" urge students to continue studying both Presidential politics and the media's affect on politics, and we hope that the McCain rally will be only the first in a number of visits to campus by prominent figures in both major American political parties.

Student apathy is ever-growing problem on campus

"The tyranny of a prince is not as dangerous to the common good as the apathy of the citizens in a democracy."
—Charles de Secondat (Baron de Montesquieu)

Dear Editor:

I will like to take this opportunity to challenge the PC community to seriously consider an ever-growing problem on campus. This problem, a virtual disease, more evident to me now since I have been away for one semester, is apathy. I see it when I walk around campus, when I see SVS sign up sheets blank, or hear that some Greek organizations force their pledges to do SVS, when students study through CEP events, when less than 50% of students vote in student elections, when no one asks questions in class, when no one reads for class, when the staff of "Figs and Thistles" has to beg for submissions, when the Amity and other exchange students feel isolated, when weekends prompt mass migrations, when athlete's participation in community events is not even considered, when it takes acts of physical violence to bring (only certain) issues of diversity into the public light, when our honor code is treated with contempt by students, when our community is at risk for its survival. This list is not complete, but it's a beginning—a beginning of awareness that, I hope, will at least encourage students, faculty, and staff to consider this problem, to discuss it openly, and to find and implement positive, consensus solutions to save this community of living, learning, and service.

Will Edwards
Senior

How many times have you heard the word diversity this year? Diversity has been a major focus this year at Presbyterian College. This is truly important and I have been pleased with Project Understanding's work and the hard work of PC's diversity consultant and Multicultural Student Union. Numerous times students or faculty have asked me my opinion on PC's diversity, so I would like to take this opportunity to share my thoughts with the larger community.

In my opinion Presbyterian has been working hard this year to examine diversity. The College has even hired a diversity candidate, whose insight and suggestions will truly be helpful over the next few years. For the first time in my memory we did not have school on Mar-who are not first recruited by athletic coaches? I think that the atmosphere at Presbyterian is the student body's responsibility. Frankly, we can do a better job.

Each year in the spring, Orientation GUIDES are selected. Almost every person that is not in a Greek organization is selected. Unfortunately, throughout my tenure, over 80% of the Orientation GUIDES are members of Greek organizations. Even the leadership of the Student Government is predominately involved in a Greek organization. As a member of a Greek organization, I do not feel that Greek organizations are the reason PC lacks diversity, but, instead, I do think that if you examine every student organization you will find that each is led and defined by an overwhelming amount of "sameness."

Every spring the torch is passed to new leadership in every student organization. Seniors graduate and other students step forward. My suggestion for dealing with diversity today at PC is to find leaders inside and outside of our organizations who are different than ourselves and who hold different opinions than our own. I hope that all of us can do our part this spring to create a more welcoming environment for high school seniors who are different than ourselves. Every one of us is capable of fixing PC's atmosphere on an individual level by popping the "PC bubble" and breaking the "PC mold." When we, as students, have done this, diversity will improve.

Citizens for a Stronger Economy and two pigs protesting pork-barrel spending. Also present was Tom Brokaw of NBC News. McCain gave a typical town hall speech and took many questions from the audience. He also spent time shaking hands until his aides ushered him back to the Straight Talk Express for departure.

Besides meeting candidates on Saturday afternoon, we also got the chance to visit the New Hampshire Presidential Primaries museum. There we saw propaganda, advertisements and photographs from past campaigns that made their way through New Hampshire.

Our class spent Saturday night at Comedy Central's Indecision 2000 debate. Politicians Grind the Media. This untelevised event hosted by Jon Stewart consisted of politicians such as Pat Schroeder and Susan Molinari questioning members of the media such as Sam Donaldson of ABC News, Claire Shipman of NBC News and Jonathan Alter of Newsweek. It was an educational as well as humorous experience to see the tables turned and see the media get flustered at the very questions they themselves are famous for asking.

January 30, 2000: Super Bowl Sunday we travelled to Portsmouth, N.H. to attend a party for Texas Gov. George W. Bush's campaign. On the way, we stopped in Durham and again saw N.J. Sen. Bill Bradley. We took this surprise opportunity to observe his audience and take some more photos.

After an excellent New England seafood dinner, we went on to the Bush Super Bowl party. Bush arrived prior to kick-off and spent the first half of the game greeting his well-wishers. He addressed the audience at half time, then boarded his bus and left the packed airplane hangar.

January 31, 2000: Today we got to choose which campaign we wanted to work for. I chose McCain and attended his rallies in Concord and Portsmouth. Our group got to see the behind-the-scenes workings of the rallies and spent the day building stages, shovelling snow and holding signs at the rallies. My peers at the Gore campaign spent the day trudging through snow to paste Gore 2000 signs around New Hampshire neighborhoods. They were never able to have any contact with their candidate due to Secret Service protection. Meanwhile the Bush volunteers waited for their candidate in Exeter until he cancelled due to a security breach. The group then left for Derry and attended a rally there for Bush's benefit.

That night we went to the Manchester Crown Plaza for an Alan Keyes party with the Drifters. There we were able to meet Congressman Lindsay Graham, Congressman Mark

Sanford, and Tennessee Senator Fred Thompson. It was exciting to run into these politicians and have the opportunity to socialize with them in such a relaxed, casual setting. They were all very interested in our class and our trip as well as our views on the race itself since South Carolina is the next major primary in the Republican nomination tion of an exciting trip. At the McCain party, the ballroom exploded at around 7:00p.m. when CNN announced John McCain the official winner of the New Hampshire Republican primary. We then eagerly awaited the arrival of the Senator who spoke to us of his monumental victory and the promise it held for a break from politics as usual. The crowd jeered and booed Texas Gov. George W. Bush's concession speech, but the general attitude was sheer excitement and encouragement that McCain was well on his way to a successful run for the presidency.

Soon our classmates who had attended the other victory parties joined us at the Crown Plaza for another night of socializing with candidates and campaign officials. I was fortunate enough to meet Gary Bauer that night in the lobby, and we were all entertained watching the filming of some of Comedy Central's Indecision 2000 coverage.

February 2, 2000: Half of our group left Manchester at 6:00a.m. on a standby flight hoping to arrive back on campus in time to see John McCain speak on our own turf. We were lucky enough to arrive at Springs Gym three minutes before McCain entered the back door.

The trip to New Hampshire was fun and exciting. It was certainly one of the best educational experiences I have ever had. But the trip was more than that. It was a chance for us to see that the political process is still alive and vibrant for Americans. The atmosphere in New Hampshire is encouraging for all citizens to be involved in the primaries and provides the opportunity for personal contact with the candidates. The idea of candidates greeting people in the streets or in local businesses seems dead to most of us, but such a system is going strong in the small state of New Hampshire. The high level of knowledge and the concern with political issues that is prevalent in New Hampshire is a lesson to the rest of us that the process still works and we need to do our part to keep it stong.

Returning to PC to see a packed house at McCain's speech was also encouraging. To see so many students turn out for a political event says a lot for our school and for our students as to their interest and concern in politics. It was a great way to end a great experience.

February 1, 2000: Again this day we were able to volunteer for the campaigns of our choice. Those of us on the McCain trail went from the headquarters in Nashua to local elementary schools that were serving as polls. At one of the schools we met Joe McCain, brother of the presidential candidate, and watched as he entertained French news stations with his cheers, in French of course. Volunteers for Gore talked to registered Democrats while the Bush crowd competed with our McCain volunteers for votes at the polls.

SVS Dancers, Dance Stop to perform Saturday night

by Jack Carmody
Staff Writer

Saturday night, February 11, 2000, dancers from Thornwell will take the stage in Belk Auditorium for their annual performance. The performance, sponsored by Student Volunteer Services, features kids from the ages of 4-14 showing off dance moves they have been perfecting for months.

The co-coordinators of the event are sophomore Rachel Jennigan and senior Jennifer Tibits. As in past years, the prestigious Dance Stop group, a professional dance company from Atlanta, will be joining the Thornwell dancers.

The girls performing at the event have been practicing for many months. The Thornwell girls are split into two different classes, with each group consisting of about nine people. Jennigan teaches the 4-9 year age group. She teaches them basic, traditional ballet steps. Although her main goal for the kids is for them to have fun, they have been taking on some challenging dance routines. Tibits handles the more experienced dancers in the 10-14 year age group. While the classes are not exclusively for girls, no boys have expressed interest in the classes as of yet. The classes meet once a week and have been doing so since early September.

Tibits stated that the dance program has been a group effort.

"We could not pull [the dance program] off without the help of Rachel and the other eight volunteers."

When Tibits first volunteered with the dance program, it was separate from SVS. The idea behind the program was to give the girls from Thornwell a chance to meet new people and spend time with one another, as well as with the volunteers. The program was not very structured and was not very big. During her freshman year, Tibits had the idea of linking the program with SVS. Thus, the SVS Formal Dance group was formed. This year marks the third year the group has performed at PC as a CFP credit event. Before coming to PC, Tibits danced with Dance Stop, so getting them to perform at the show was not hard.

"[The program] gives the girls a sense of being and the ability to have the confidence that they can do whatever they put their minds, too," said Tibits. "They can also apply this confidence into their everyday life."

The performance will be held in Belk Auditorium, on February 11, at 7:30 P.M. The dancers from Thornwell will perform first, while the Dance Stop Company will close the program. The show will last approximately one hour and will be a CFP credit event.

"The audience will be entertained by a professional dance group and many talented girls from Thornwell," said Jennigan. "They should also expect a high energy show, with several costume changes. I believe this program will be different from any other CFP held at PC this year."

The dancers have also planned an end of the year show, which will feature the dances performed at this show, as well as new routines.

McCain campaign

would characterize his candidacy.

"My dear friends, I will say things in this campaign that you don't agree with," he said. "I will say things most of the time that you do agree with. But you can be sure of one thing—I will always tell the truth."

McCain attributed his success in New Hampshire, which allows for same-day voter-registration, in part to his ability to mobilize college students to vote for him, and he urged college students to do the same in the Palmetto State.

McCain directed many of his comments to the PC students that packed the arena.

"Once I'm President of the United States and I reform this government and get it back into your hands, I will be able to inspire a generation of young Americans to commit themselves to their country's cause, and that's really—really—what this business of being President is all about," he said. "... My dear friends, I'll reflect your hopes and dreams and aspirations, because I'll give the government back to you. My job will be to get you involved again."

Indeed, the 63-year-old Senator demonstrated a keen ability to connect with college students both in New Hampshire and at PC. While some PC students said that they were not impressed with the media hype surrounding McCain's visit, many other students said that McCain's visit inspired them to become involved in his campaign.

SGA President Jay Philpott, who supports McCain, attributed the candidate's popularity with students to his openness.

"One of the people in the media said that he'd never seen as much openness and availability in any candidate before in his life," said Philpott. "I think maybe just the fact that he's not afraid to let people in and let people see his life accounts for his popularity... One of the people in the Republican campaign against McCain said that he's unfit to be President because of his whole Vietnam ordeal of being thrown into prison [in North Vietnam]. So what's he do? He opens up every single medical record on himself that he's ever had."

Junior Beth Blackburn initially supported conservative GOP candidate Gary Bauer, who dropped out of the Presidential campaign last Thursday after finishing last in the New Hampshire primary. But after McCain's visit to PC, she now counts herself among McCain supporters.

"I really feel that we need a leader in the party who is going to have more than a great chance of winning," said Blackburn. "It's not that I don't support Bauer's views; I really do. But I think that it's going to be between McCain and [Texas Governor George W.] Bush. I don't favor Bush as much because I feel that when he speaks he caters to the crowd that he's in front of. He doesn't seem to take a decisive stand for any specific issue. I would rather have a President who really does stand for something and really believes in something because I think that the kinds of Presidents that have been great national leaders, the ones that we remember, are the ones that get in and really do something. I think McCain has the potential to do that. He has a charisma to him that tends to make people listen to him."

Sen. John McCain greet supporters at his campaign rally at PC

Other PC students were not as impressed with McCain's message at PC.

"He was a politician," said sophomore Robert Kurts. "He catered to his audience and did a fairly good job at it."

Senior Will Edwards said that he was less-impressed with McCain after seeing him in person at PC.

"I felt like he was manipulating the students just for a TV spectacle to get support," said Edwards. "I didn't think that he really gave the students any concrete information on his policy positions. It was just a big Hollywood-style production to help him kickoff his campaign. He didn't give me anything substantial. Fortunately, I've been keeping up with his policy positions in the newspapers, so I know more what he's about than you could tell from his 15 minute, basic Republican political cliches that he was giving us."

Nevertheless, McCain's campaigning strategy has apparently worked thus far in the Palmetto State, where the Republican Presidential primary is, according to "The State" newspaper's Lee Bundy, "the crucial primary of the Republican Presidential campaign." Only last week, before the GOP candidates arrived in South Carolina, polls placed Bush well ahead of McCain among the state's voters. Two days later, the polls reported a McCain lead by five points. As of press time, McCain and Bush were neck-in-neck in the polls.

The South Carolina GOP Presidential primary will be held Feb. 15.

Brazil native Dinsmore plays soccer, makes music

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

Stop by the Pondo during the fall semester and you're likely to see Roddy Dinsmore score a goal for the Blue Hose soccer team; stop by GDIH on a Tuesday and you're likely to see him converse in German, Spanish or Portuguese with other foreign language students; stop by Georgia Dome anytime and you're likely to see him write a song while playing the guitar.

A native of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, senior Roddy Dinsmore, who now resides in Bristol, Tenn., is certainly no stranger to most PC students.

PC soccer fans know him for his action on the playing field. In his three-year career, Dinsmore totaled 26 total points on 10 goals and six assists. He was selected to the All-South Atlantic Conference team twice, and this year he was named to the first-team All-Region and the NSCAA/Adidas All-American second team for men's college Division II.

Dinsmore said that his friendship with his teammates on the Blue Hose men's soccer team has been particularly important to his PC experience.

"The soccer team has definitely been a huge part of my life here at PC," said Dinsmore. "I've really learned to love those guys and I respect them a lot. I really thank God daily for their lives and our friendships."

He added that one of his funniest memories of PC is the time last semester that "the other guys" on the soccer team streaked the campus.

Other PC students know him for his musical accomplishments. Dinsmore frequently performs at on-campus events, including Thursday night Acoustic Cafe concerts at Starbucks, and he recently released his first album, "Big Green Couch."

"I've always loved music," said Dinsmore. "I was raised in Brazil, which is a very musically-inclined culture. I started playing the guitar when I was 16 and started composing shortly thereafter at about the age of 17. It's been an incredible blessing because God has used music to reach me, to draw me to Him, to introduce me to a relationship with Christ. It's a blessing right now that God is allowing me to use the same method to reach other people for Christ."

Dinsmore said that his room in Georgia Dome gave him the idea for the title track of "Big Green Couch."

"I wrote that song my junior year here at PC," he said. "I had just gotten the big green couch from a professor of mine who had gotten married and moved to Turkey. I was sitting in my room sitting on the couch one day, looking around at my room, and just as a joke I started describing what my room looked like that day—there were clothes all over the place, my trashcan was full and it was a real mess. And then after a while I realized that the condition of my room and what I was singing about was a perfect allegory of the conditions of our hearts without Christ—there's just a bunch of junk lying around that doesn't need to be there."

Another song in the album, "Perceptions," deals with Roddy's pain after his younger brother Marcello was killed by a drunk driver on June 7, 1998.

"He was always very supportive of me in every thing I did, especially in my music," said Dinsmore. "He always encouraged me to continue writing, seeking a ministry in my music. And I know that after he died a lot of my lyrics started taking deeper values to them, had deeper meanings. The style of music that my brother used to enjoy has become the style of music that I play right now. His life and death have really impacted me."

Dinsmore said that "Perceptions" was placed at the end of the album in memory of Marcello.

"It's actually a hidden track—song number-eight on the cd—because my brother's soccer number was number-eight, and we decided to leave track number-seven open as a moment of silence in honor and memory of him."

Still other students know Dinsmore for his faith and friendship.

"Roddy's been through a lot of hard times the past two years but has always depended on God," said senior Seth Stoddard, one of Dinsmore's suite mates. "God has blessed Roddy because of his faithfulness. God's blessing and presence in Roddy's life is very evident in Roddy's life and ministry."

"The first thing that comes to my mind when I think of Roddy is, 'Silly Brazilian,'" said suite mate Trey Williams. "On a more serious note, Roddy is closer than a brother to me and probably my most loyal friend. I know that he would do anything for me."

Staff Spotlight

Stansberry continues to serve his alma mater as part of admissions staff

by Helen Machida
Staff Writer

Straight from Johnson City, Tennessee, Presbyterian College's Daniel Stansberry takes the Spotlight. Stansberry is often found working in PC's very own Office of Admissions or in Templeton working for his favorite Hose at a basketball game.

Graduating from Presbyterian College, Class of 1996 with a double major in Business and English, Stansberry made the transition into the real world by entering in the front door of his very own alma mater's Office of Admissions.

As associate director of admissions, Stansberry is now helping to foster the friendly atmosphere that first brought him to PC.

"One of the reasons I came here after high school and stayed here were the people," he said. "The students and faculty set PC apart."

Stansberry made a career for himself as soon as he arrived on campus his freshman year. As a freshman, he worked in the Admissions office as a part of his work-study program. Upon becoming a sophomore, Stansberry became involved with the student guided tours and continued with the program through his senior year.

Now a part of our admissions staff, Stansberry is kept very busy. If he is not to be found in his office, he is with prospective students on campus or in various locations throughout the South at college fairs and high schools.

One of the reasons he became interested in the Office of Admissions is because it gave him an opportunity to work with students and travel. As a member of the admissions staff, Stansberry knows everything about the college and if he can not answer a question, he will find an answer.

After three and a half years visiting numerous campuses he still holds to the belief that "PC is by far one of the friendliest."

A part of PC's friendliness comes from the fact that it does have such a devoted and enthusiastic staff. Sophomore Janice Preston became friends with Stansberry on her tour of PC during her senior year of high school.

"He's a nice guy," she said. "He'll do anything for anybody."

Not only is Stansberry a "nice guy," but he is also a lot of fun.

During PC's last snow storm, Preston teased him by throwing snowballs at his office window. In response to her friendly jesting, Stansberry joined her outside dressed up in his suit and tie to engage in the snowball war.

Currently, Stansberry is working on his Masters in Higher Education. In the future, he hopes to have the opportunity to work as a college counselor in a small high school. He feels a small school will enable him to have more contact with the students, and he will more effectively be able to help them in finding a college that is right for them.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

Presbyterian College's head football coach Daryl Dickey has announced his recruiting class for the upcoming season after signing 15 recruits to national letters of intent.

"We are extremely excited about the signing class of 2000," said Dickey. "They are all outstanding student-athletes and will be a great addition to Presbyterian College."

Among the signees are seven players from South Carolina, four of whom were participants on the South Carolina Shrine Bowl team and two who participated in the North/South All-Star game. Seven players are from Georgia and one from North Carolina.

The Blue Hose are coming off another impressive season, posting a 7-4 overall record. Following the 8-3 mark of 1998, this record marks the first back-to-back winning seasons since 1984 and 1985.

Four high school seniors have signed national letters of intent to play women's volleyball at Presbyterian College for Blue Hose head coach Lisa Bugay. They are Debbie Tamosaitis, Lindsay Mitchell, Jennifer Nycz and Kellie Hare. Two are from South Carolina and two from Florida. Combined, the four new players accumulated a 98-20 record during their senior year in high school.

"We are very excited to sign four outstanding recruits," said Bugay. "These four players will make an immediate impact on our program next season and for the next four years."

PC is coming off a 22-11 season, which saw the Blue Hose finish second in the South Atlantic Conference. The Blue Hose advanced to the championship game of the Food Lion SAC Tournament before losing the regular-season championship to Gardner-Webb University.

Catawba ends PC winning streak, Lady Blue Hose defeat Lenoir-Rhyne, Wingate

Four players scoring in double figures helped push the #6 Presbyterian College women's basketball team past the Bears of Lenoir-Rhyne College, 79-75, on Saturday, Jan., 29 in Templeton Center.

At the tip the Blue Hose took control of the game, going on a 6-0 run. PC reached an eight-point lead on three occasions in the half led by junior forward Rachel Sloan and sophomore forward Toni Leopard—who both had 10 points in the first half, which ended with the Blue Hose ahead 35-30.

In the second half PC went up by as much as 10 (17-18) before the Bears battled back to tie the game 45-45 at the 14:53 mark. Led by freshman guard Maya Grady's 16 points, the Bears took the lead at the 13:34 mark (49-47) and saw as much as an eight-point lead over PC.

Junior forward Tracy Woody finished the game with 17 points and led PC's final push to take over the lead at the 11:06 mark. With 40 seconds remaining in the game the Blue Hose were ahead by only two points when the Bears sent sophomore forward Janet Vicks to the line, where she made two free throws and sealed the win.

The Blue Hose were led by Sloan, who finished the game with 18 points and seven rebounds; Woody, with 17 points; Leopard, with 16 points and six rebounds; and senior guard Jill Neumann, with 15 points and six assists. Senior guard Heather Couch also had six assists, along with five points and two steals.

But the winning streak didn't last. Catawba College upset #4-ranked and previously undefeated Presbyterian College, 68-58, last Wednesday night at Goodman Gym in Salisbury, N.C. The Lady Indians led from start to finish. The Lady Blue Hose fell to 19-1 overall and 9-1 in the SAC.

Catawba surged ahead in the first five minutes and led 15-5. The closest PC ever got was within seven points with a 36-29 score just before halftime. Catawba shot 51.6 percent. PC shot only 22.2 percent and had 14 turnovers at the break. At the half, the score was 39-19.

PC got within 12 at 48-36 in the first seven-plus minutes of the second half and closed to 50-42 following a pair of free throws from sophomore forward Toni Leopard. PC got within seven again following a basket by junior forward Rachel Sloan with 5:35 left in the game, but could not complete the comeback.

Sloan led scoring for PC with 20 points. Leopard had 18 and junior Tracy Woody added 10.

The Lady Blue Hose returned to their unbeatable play in their next game against Wingate. However, the Lady Bulldogs troubled PC, pushing the match into overtime following a close score in regulation time.

In the first half, PC hit only nine of 30 field goal attempts, yet Wingate fared little better hitting 10 of 28 field goals to take a 30-24 lead into halftime.

PC trailed throughout the second half as well as they shot a mere 38.2 percent from the floor. PC was however 18 for 24 behind the free throw line.

The Hose took their first lead of the game on a free throw by senior guard Heather Couch with 3:34 to go in the overtime, putting PC up 64-63. However, with 39 seconds remaining on the clock, Wingate again found themselves ahead 68-67. Then Sloan, with 25 seconds remaining, hit a two-pointer. On PC's final possession, senior guard Jill Neumann sunk two foul shots with three points left giving PC the victory.

Sloan led the team with 20 points and 14 rebounds. Woody added 14 points and Neumann scored 13 points with five assists. Leopard added ten points and eight rebounds.

At press time, the score of Wednesday night's home game against Carson Newman was unavailable. The next Lady Blue Hose basketball game is tomorrow at 5:45 p.m. in Templeton against Mars Hill.

Men's basketball beat Lenoir-Rhyne in overtime, fall to Catawba and Wingate

The Presbyterian College men's basketball team won an overtime victory on Sat., Jan. 29 against Lenoir-Rhyne, only to fall the following week against Catawba and Wingate.

PC freshman guard Chuck Rayford scored a game-high 23 points, including nine in overtime, to lead the Blue Hose to a 76-67 overtime win against the Bears of Lenoir-Rhyne College in men's basketball action at Templeton Center in Clinton, S.C.

The Bears took command early, staking themselves a 13-4 lead with 12:26 left in the first half. The Blue Hose fought back to tie the game at 15 using an 11-2 run. The first half went back and forth, with both teams taking control of the momentum, and the Bears used a tough defense to take a 34-30 lead into intermission. PC struggled from the floor in the first period shooting 37.5 percent on nine-of-24.

The second half saw the Bears take a seven-point lead with 16:20 remaining, only to have the Blue Hose go on an 18-5 run for a 53-47 lead with a little over seven minutes left to play. PC was nearly perfect in the second half, shooting 65.4 percent from the floor. Both teams exchanged baskets in the last minute of regulation and ended the game tied at 61 all.

The overtime period was all Presbyterian College as they scored 15 points in the extra period. The Blue Hose led the game on the line, hitting six-of-six free throws.

But the Blue Hose's fortunes did not last. Catawba College snapped a six-game losing streak and knocked off league-leading Presbyterian College, 61-58, in men's basketball action on Wednesday, Feb. 3 at Goodman Gym in Salisbury, N.C. PC fell to a 9-9 record overall and 7-2 in the South Atlantic Conference.

PC's senior forward Mac Harper put the Blue Hose up 5-4 on a three-pointer, but Catawba followed with a three-point play with 14:30 remaining in the opening half. Catawba never trailed again. The Indians used a 8-2 run midway through the half to gain a 23-16 edge then spurred ahead 37-28 at the break.

Catawba increased its lead in the second half to 46-30 after a turnaround jumper at the 14:27 mark and went up by 17 points at 51-34 after a dunk with 10:31 left. Then the Indians went cold. Catawba made just two field goals and six free throws the rest of the game but still managed to hold on for the win.

The Blue Hose tried to chip away at the deficit. Freshman forward Jeff Whittle nailed a three-pointer with 4:02 left, bringing PC to within 54-47, then freshman guard Chuck Rayford scored on a drive with 1:28 left to cut the lead to 57-52.

With 25 seconds remaining, PC junior guard Kevin Campbell sank a three to reduce the Tribe's lead to 59-56, but the Indians hit the second of two free throws with 18 seconds left on the clock. Rayford hit a layup at the buzzer for the final margin. Rayford scored 15 points and added nine rebounds to lead Presbyterian College. Campbell had an even dozen points.

Three days later, Wingate University, ranked thirteenth in NCAA Division II, extended its home win streak to 24 with a 65-61 double overtime win over Presbyterian College Saturday night in Cuddy Arena at Wingate, N.C.

Wingate's home-court winning streak is the second-longest in NCAA Division II. The Bulldogs stand at 18-2 overall and 8-2 in the SAC. PC falls to 9-10 overall and 7-3 in the SAC.

The Bulldogs and the Blue Hose matched baskets throughout the first half with Wingate taking a 25-23 lead at halftime. The second half was more of the same, although PC hit only eight of 22 shots from the floor during the second half, but the Blue Hose did go 21-for-26 at the foul line to keep the game even.

Wingate senior guard Brandon Harris hit a three-pointer with 25 seconds left to send the game into overtime at 51-51. PC freshman guard Chuck Rayford missed a short jumper at the buzzer which would have won the game for the Blue Hose.

In the first overtime, PC junior forward DJ. Humphries hit a follow at the buzzer to tie the game at 60 and force a second overtime period. Wingate, however, never trailed in the second OT as Harris made one free-throw at 4:57 to make the score 61-60 and Rayford countered with a free throw at 3:06 to tie the game at 61.

Wingate sophomore guard Lonnie Harrington made a basket at 1:50 to give the Bulldogs the lead for keeps, and two free throws by freshman guard Djuan Hankins with 12 seconds remaining represented the final margin.

Senior forward Daniel Bruce led the Bulldogs with 19 points off the bench. Harris and Hankins each added 13 points, while junior forward Jonathan Tyson chipped in 10 points.

For PC, freshman center Jerry Barlow scored 15 points and grabbed six rebounds, while Humphries added 13 points and eight rebounds. Rayford scored 11 points and handed out four assists.

PC baseball season opens with North Florida tourney

After the first two scheduled games of the Presbyterian College 2000 baseball season (against North Georgia State College and University of Southern Wesleyan University) fell victim to snowy weather, the Blue Hose opened their season at the three-day University of North Florida Invitational in Jacksonville on Feb. 4-6. The Blue Hose lost the first two games of the season on Friday and Saturday but then defeated the University of Alabama-Huntsville on Sunday.

PC fell to Saint Leo College, 5-3, on Friday afternoon and then dropped a 9-8 decision to host UNF on Saturday. The Blue Hose claimed its first win of the season with an 8-2 win over UAH on Sunday.

As of press time, the only details available were of Saturday's game against the University of North Florida, which scored four runs in the bottom of the sixth inning to take a 9-6 lead and held on for a 9-8 win over PC at Harmon Stadium.

Senior center fielder Kyle Catlett led UNF with three hits, three runs scored and an RBI, while Kevin Kay and Brian Fleetwood each drove in a pair of runs. Mike Wood (1-0) picked up the win for UNF (4-1) in relief of starter Daren McMillan. Wood recorded five strikeouts through 4.1 innings, walking none and allowing two runs—one earned—on four hits. He struck out four of the first five batters he faced.

Brad Teal led the Blue Hose (0-2) with three hits, driving in three runs, while Brian Ritchie drove in four runs on two hits. Starter Kevin Felts (0-1) took the loss for PC, going 5.2 innings and allowing eight runs—seven earned—on seven hits and three walks and two hit batsmen.

PC scored twice in the top of the first, but UNF responded with four runs in the bottom of the inning. Both teams then went scoreless for three innings before the Blue Hose pushed four runs across in the top of the fifth. UNF came back with a single run in the bottom of the fifth and then with four in the sixth. PC scored its final two runs in the top of the seventh.

Spotlight on Ed Bianchi: Sharpest tack in the tack box

by Joe Evans
and Ben Thomas

How do you judge the greatness of a senior? Is it academics? Is it heritage? Is it fraternity? NO!!! Those are horribly wrong answers. The answer is—intramurals. Of course, we are all quite aware of the presence of intramurals at our fine establishment of Presbyterian College, but have any of you readers ever stopped to ponder, "How in the world did we ever get intramurals at our school?" The answer lies in the history of our great warrior from the North, Ed Bianchi. It all began about forty-five years ago...

In the year 1955, John Reading's mother was born, but that's not important right now. Instead, in the year of our Lord, nineteen hundred and fifty-five, Ed Bianchi was a steroid pumping Russian woman with dreams of Olympic gold against her arch-rival, Chinese speed skater Harold. Caught amidst the trappings of a brutal rivalry with Harold (also a woman), Ed (then called "Chaps" for her Western fashions) came to a sudden realization—speed skating would be soooooo...on weed. She immediately kicked her eight-year steroid habit and started dancing the one-woman foxtrox on the streets of St. Petersburg so that she could buy her hashish. Inevitably, Ed's skating career went "up in smoke" (heh heh) as her habits slowly resonated in all walks of life. Ah, yes, the all-too-depressing story of brilliant talent gone to waste. BUT (thank goodness), this is not the end of the story...

The turning point came ten years later, in 1679, when "Chaps" found herself lazing away days in her inner city hut constructed of empty Funyun bags and the gold lining of Rolos wrappers. Confronted by the nagging questions of "where is my life going?", "where is my next meal coming from?", and "why are the long sleeves on girls' shirts getting shorter and shorter, or are the short sleeves getting longer and longer?" Ed saw the need for change. Fortunately, Ed's prior experience with the WASM (Women Against Steve Mizarak, "The Miz") had cultivated in her the distinct traits of "pool sharkness." She ran through pool halls like a needle through Fruit Loops for Christmas ornaments, playing gullible Texan billiardsmen like tenpenny pianos. She found herself in an especially sullied (trashy and rough, if you will) pool hall called the Springs Campus Center, where the "bottom feeders" (including the mighty pufferfish) of local society met to gamble away their meager paychecks (or BonusBucks, if you will) and throw dice at passing animals. Here, Ed found herself established financially, but confronted with the same competitive pressures of her speed skating days. "There must be something I can do!!" she exclaimed with particular gusto while checking her e-mail. Just then, the sun shone through the tinted skylights on the sinciput of a man with the physique of a Laurens County Tuff-Man competitor and the intuition of a first-year Biology major (i.e. Robyn Dohn). His voice rang through the eardrums of our protagonist, Ed ("Chaps"), like the sounds of LFO when they say, "I like girls that wear Abercrombie & Fitch." His name... Brian Madden. He proved to be the guiding force in the renewal of the downtrodden life of Ms. Ed. Brian spoke.

"Hello."

Ed replied, "Hello yourself."

What a glorious moment!!! It was as if the clouds had flung themselves wide open and lots of meteors had come crashing down on the unsuspecting citizens of Earth. Ed knew that she must act, but she feared the public reaction to her previous life of addiction and horse wrangling. What to do? Where to go? Who you gonna call?

Keller Malone...no, wait, that's wrong. She called the doctor (i.e. Gray Wallington)—for there's nothing modern technology can't do these days. When the mighty "Chaps" arose from slumber, the entity now known as Mr. Ed Bianchi had both feminine vigor and lots of synthetic testosterone. Ed not only dominated his new system of "intamural sports," but he also planned scheduled events which culminated in a new "Intramural League." The campus had never seen or heard of such before—they all believed that Ed was the Chosen One, prophesied to bring physical fitness and afternoon activity to the underachieving athletes of PC College. Secretly, Ed knew that he was not, but he didn't tell because he liked the sacrifices.

Ed then went as far as to order the construction crews that were erecting the buildings on campus to include columns on every building. (He constantly made offhand requests, such as the time he requested plastic lawn dwarves be employed at local gas stations.) Unfortunately, his orders were not carried out entirely and the greenhouse was left columnless...and that is the story of why the greenhouse is the only building on campus without columns.

George W. Bush visits PC, wins big in S.C. primary

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

He waited until the last day of the campaign to come to PC, but he came, nonetheless.

On Friday, February 19, just one day before his landslide victory in the South Carolina Republican Presidential primary, Texas Gov. George W. Bush addressed a crowd of students and local supporters in the Close Arena at Springs Campus Center, where his closest opponent, Arizona Sen. John McCain, opened his South Carolina campaign two weeks earlier.

Although most polls last Friday placed Bush with only an uncomfortable three or four-point lead over McCain, Bush spoke optimistically about his platform of family values, tax cuts, strong defense and local control of education.

"We can send messages tomorrow and it all begins with you going to the polls tomorrow and pulling that George W. lever. Tomorrow is a big day in American politics because when South Carolina votes for George W. Bush tomorrow, it will be the beginning of the end of the Clinton era," said Bush.

Bush, who has received support from most of the state's GOP leadership, was accompanied by a number of prominent South Carolina Republicans. U.S. Congressman Jim DeMint, who represents Greenville and Spartanburg Counties, introduced Bush, while other big guns in the state GOP, including Lieutenant Gov.

error Bob Peeler, Attorney General Charlie Condon, Speaker of the House David Wilkins and former Governor Carroll Campbell, attended the event.

In addition, Bush's entourage included U.S. Congressmen J.C. Watts from Oklahoma and Sam Johnson from Texas, who both also spoke on behalf of Bush.

Johnson, who served in both the Korean and Vietnam Wars and was imprisoned with McCain in the notorious "Hanoi Hilton" in North Vietnam, addressed military veterans in particular, emphasizing Bush's military experience in the Texas Air National Guard. The Texas congressman sharply criticized his former military colleague and prisoner of war.

"John McCain can't hold a candle to George W. Bush," said Johnson.

Bush himself spoke at length on his defense policy when he took the stage after introductory remarks by DeMint, Watts, Johnson and PC SGA Vice-President Sarah Hopper.

"Tomorrow we have a chance that South Carolina can send a message that our party stands for keeping the peace," said Bush. "We understand clearly that it's still a dangerous world. It's a world of madmen and missiles and terror, and it's a world of uncertainty. But

SGA proposes bylaw changes to student body

by Ben Thomas
Staff Writer

In recent weeks, the Student Government Association (SGA) has proposed changes in procedures and bylaws concerning various administrative issues, including SGA organization, financial procedure and administrative efficiency. Each of these issues is being addressed in an attempt to improve the general student welfare.

Heading these changes is SGA President Jay Philpott, who gave a generous outline of proposed reforms.

"Currently, the Student Government's Executive Council consists of the President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, Judicial Council Chairperson and the Student Union Board President," explained Philpott, concerning the changes in general government organization. "Having the Student Union Board President as a member of the SGA Executive Council, to some, makes it appear that they are more valued than other 'at-large' members of the SGA such as MSU, RHA, and SVS. While SUB is essential for programming social events for the campus, they are no more nor no less important than the other 'at large' members of the SGA. Therefore, the SGA brings to you a recommendation that the SUB President be moved from a seat on the SGA Executive Council to a member at large of the SGA."

The changes in general organization are also tied to proposed changes in financial organization, especially in reference to the office of Treasurer.

"As many of you know, next year, recognized student organizations will be able to apply for additional funds from the Student Government Finance Committee (SGFC). As a result of this exciting accomplishment, the SGA's Treasurer must not only be financially savvy but also impartial with a long and short term vision," said Philpott. "The SGA Treasurer will be the chair of the SGFC and will need to work closely with Presbyterian College's Business Office. The Treasurer will perform important and highly skilled tasks. The officer must be capable of balancing budgets, filling out check requests forms, have excellent interpersonal skills and must also be a strong leader. Currently, the SGA Treasurer is elected through the traditional method: campaign, speech, and a campus-wide election. This is a hit or miss election, some years a financially savvy individual will be elected while other years a person who cannot even balance their own checkbook might be elected. With the creation of the SGFC the Treasurer will have a checkbook totaling roughly $25,000."

"The Treasurer's position will be so important that the Student Government brings you the recommendation that Treasurer candidates have to go through an application process," said Philpott. "The

POINT

Two thumbs up to students for involvement, interest in S.C. Republican Presidential primary

All eyes were on South Carolina during the two weeks of the state's Republican Presidential primary campaign, and, with national and even international media attention focused on South Carolina, South Carolinians have a good reason to be proud of their state: a record number of South Carolina voters cast their ballots in the state's Republican Presidential primary last Saturday.

Throughout the campaign, nationally-syndicated journalists noted the enthusiasm and excitement that South Carolinians have shown for this primary. In particular, journalists noted the interest and involvement that the state's college students have taken in the Presidential race. With the visits of Sen. McCain and Gov. Bush to the campus of Presbyterian College, students in the "PC bubble" have taken a greater interest than usual in the political events of the outside world. From the couches of Springs to the tables of GDH, students seem to be discussing politics more frequently than in the past; and more than a few students have even volunteered their time to support the candidates of their choice.

In this age of cynicism and disillusionment, we at the "Blue Stocking" applaud this renewed enthusiasm about the political process. We recognize that too often our elected officials allow political expediency to take precedent over political ethics and that special interests do, indeed, have an undeniably large influence over the political process. But the last time we checked, the people still had the right to choose their leaders. Political reforms can be made only if the citizens of the United States exercise their constitutional right to vote and take an interest in their nation's political well-being.

We at the "Blue Stocking" applaud students for the interest that they have already taken in this year's Presidential race, and we urge students to continue to stay informed about and involved in politics for the remainder of this campaign and beyond.

Editor's Notes

"Blue Stocking" goes online

Throughout this academic year, the "Blue Stocking" has been working with Presbyterian College Net Page editor Joshua Thompson to put the "Blue Stocking" online. While we are still working out a few kinks resulting from merging the two publications, we are pleased to announce that the first online version of the Presbyterian College newspaper is now on the web. Visit our website at:

web.presby.edu/pcnp/bluestocking

We would appreciate any feedback that you have regarding either the online or print versions of the "Blue Stocking."

Unfortunately the Student Government Constitution and Bylaws are a little outdated. The Student Government has been trying to update these two important documents this semester. To conquer this enormous task the SGA formed an Ad Hoc committee that met each week following the regular SGA meeting. The Ad Hoc committee debated changes and then brought their decisions to the SGA as a whole for more discussion and voting. Using the Ad Hoc committee proved to make discussions more efficient and effective.

Student Government Constitutional changes must be approved by a three-fourths majority vote of the Student Government. Once this has occurred the student body must vote on the changes. These are important changes that involve changes to areas such as membership, funding issues and elections. Therefore, I would like to discuss these changes with you so that you can make an informed decision when you vote on the amended Constitution following Spring Break.

The proposed changes are the following: 1) instituting an application process for the SGA's Treasurer position, 2) requiring all candidates for SGA President to have served a full year in the SGA in order to be eligible for the position, 3) making rising seniors ineligible for the SGA's Vice-Presidential position, 4) increased representation of student organizations in the SGA and the creation of a Religion Council and 5) the creation of a Student Senate from the already-existing President's Council. These proposed changes are reported in greater depth in the article on page 1 of the "Blue Stocking."

Student opinions welcome

In seeking to foster campus discussion of important issues that we face here at Presbyterian College, the "Blue Stocking" encourages students to voice their opinions through the campus newspaper. While "Blue Stocking" editors sometimes voice their opinions in the "My Turn" column, we encourage students who are not associated with the College newspaper to submit opinion columns or letters to the editor for publication in the "Blue Stocking." Drop off letters in campus box 51061, call our office at ext. 8488, or e-mail us at bluestock@admin.presby.edu

Once again, all of these proposed Constitutional changes will be available for your ratification or rejection after spring break. Please feel free to discuss these changes amongst yourselves so that you can make an informed decision. I feel that when you seriously consider these changes and envision their long-term implications you will find that we bring you sound recommendations that will serve you well during your tenure at PC.

I also hope that those of you who have questions or concerns bring those forward to me or another member of the Student Government. We seek to serve, so please let us help you understand the importance and the goals these changes will accomplish. The Knapsack asks that SGA members should recognize their responsibility to their fellow students and to the College and should insure that the SGA continues as a viable organization. The above changes will insure SGA's viability in future years.

As my tenure as President of this student body begins to close I would like to take another chance to thank those you elected who have served with me this year. I am impressed with everything they have accomplished working together as an Association and I am impressed with the things they accomplished working with PC's staff. No one person can or would take credit for the successes this year. Each of them has earned your gratitude through countless hours and dedication. Some of you may think that we will be resting on our laurels this semester, let me assure you that each of us will continue to fight for you until the last day of our term, no matter how great the task.

SGA reforms to be ratified/rejected by student body application process would include an informational application and two recommendations. One recommendation would come from a person who has known the candidate to be financially responsible and the other from a student organization's president. The outgoing Executive Council will then read over the applications and will appoint the new Treasurer. The appointed Treasurer's name will then be placed on the ballot for ratification or rejection through a campus wide election.

Vice President Sara Hopper also commented on financial issues, explaining that the changes were basically tailored to bring greater student control and accountability to the use of funds and outlining two of the concerns that are to be remedied by proposed reforms to the financial policy.

She said that first, plans have been made to require more frequent applications for money and to increase student organizations' accountability for the use of that money. Second, the creation of groups such as the Student Government Finance Committee, which would hear appeals for funds, would increase direct student control of the allocation of funds.

Further changes concern the filling of SGA positions, outlining and modifying requirements for positions such as President and Vice President in an attempt to bring the students with the greatest prowess into these positions. In the case of the President, the proposed change is to require "one full year's experience" on Student Council for anyone running for President, so that the candidate will have experience in organizing Orientation, appointing students to faculty committees, planning goals and attending the annual conference.

Another issue, which directly relates to the President is the election of the Vice President.

"Examining the past four years of the Student Government's history at PC, one will find that two of the past SGA Vice Presidents were seniors and two were juniors," explained Philpott. "These past two years we have been able to use the Vice President as a grooming ground for further leadership, not necessarily the next SGA President but future leadership in general. The President and Vice President attend Trustee meetings and have more exposure and leadership development than other SGA positions. When both the President and Vice President are seniors, the two members with the largest perspective graduate in the same year. Disorganization and a scramble to create new allies also occurs. The Student Government recommends that the students ratify our suggestion to change the requirements for election to the Vice Presidential post. We suggest that the Vice Presidential post hold the stipulation that rising seniors not be eligible for election. If this passes, rising seniors will still be able to run for four of the other five Executive Council posts."

Philpott said that he considers this proposal to be the most important of the proposed changes.

Also, in reference to student administration, the SGA recommends that representatives from more student organizations be included on SGA and that a Religion Council be created with representation on SGA.

"The Student Government seeks to be a sampling and an accurate representation of the student body. Nevertheless, the Student Government does not have membership that represents all of the areas the students feel are important," said Philpott. "Currently we have representation from all four classes, MSU, SVS, RHA and SUB. Therefore, we represent each class, multicultural students, service, the residential community and the social life. Well, at this time we feel that we should add three more members to the Student Government so that we can better serve the student body. The first, we would like to add the President of the Student Athlete Advisory Council. The second, we would like to add the President of the Student Publications Board. And the last representative we would like to add will require a little more paper work, a Religion Council President. Currently there is not a Religion Council. We have created bylaws for this council and will be meeting with the Presidents of religion organizations such as WF, FCA, BSU, the Newman Club and etc. over the coming weeks to reveal and debate these bylaws. The students deserve the best representation; not adding religion, athletics and media to the SGA would be a serious mistake."

To further improve on student representation, as well as basic efficiency, class representatives are being both added to the student government and reassigned to a group apart from the SGA.

"If you have the opportunity to take Management and Organizational Behavior during your tenure at Presbyterian you will learn the following: as group size increases cohesiveness decreases," said Philpott. "The Student Government would like to represent your needs and concerns but we do not want to get too big and turn into an inefficient bureaucracy. Therefore, we would like to create a Senate similar to those found at Davidson and other schools similar in character and size to Presbyterian College. Currently a President's Council, consisting of each student organization's president meets once a month. The Student Government recommends that we turn the President's Council into the Presbyterian College's first Student Senate. Each recognized student organization and group would have a senator in the Senate. In addition, the class representatives from each class would move from the Student Government Association to serve as senior senators. While this would decrease the size of the SGA by eight members, it would be better for the students. Current class representatives and class presidents struggle with not having enough hands to help when it comes time to carrying out class fundraisers and class meetings. Therefore, we also suggest that we increase class representative opportunities for each class by having four representatives per class instead of two."

Philpott said that students will have the opportunity to reject or ratify these proposed changes after Spring Break.

PC IN BRIEF

Safe Ride Shuttle back in action with new name, new corporate sponsor

The Safe Ride Shuttle is again in operation with a new name devised by the College's public relations office: the "Student Campus Official Transport" (SCOT).

Last semester, the Student Government Association started to look for ways of increasing the availability and use of the shuttle. At the SGA's request, Enterprise Rent-A-Car donated five hundred dollars towards the program, partly to be used for printing the tee shirts the volunteer drivers get after the use of their services. In order to provide better supervision for the program, a different representative from SGA supervises each night that the shuttle is in action. Drivers are also given the route and rules and regulations the Monday before they are scheduled to drive the shuttle, instead of the day before.

The SCOT operates Friday and Saturday nights and can easily be identified by the flashing orange light on the top of the roof. The route which SCOT travels was named the "Blue Line." The route goes through fraternity court, and around to the dorms and other main parts of the campus.

Everyone who volunteers to drive SCOT receives a free tee shirt with the phrase, "Don't walk the line, ride it" on the back. These shirts come in PC blue color. Dependable volunteers are always needed to drive the shuttle. Contact Tripp Taylor, Mindy Powers, or come by Springs for more information about driving SCOT.

"I really enjoyed driving the shuttle," said senior Bryan Riddle. "Although the trip from the dorms to the fraternity houses is not a long one, it can still be dangerous. I like the fact that people have something to depend on to get to and from the houses safely."

WAP students receive certification in Advanced Wilderness First Aid

Last month, four PC students descended on the Davidson College campus to attend a Wilderness Medical Associates course on Advanced Wilderness First Aid (WAFA). Nick Strangous, Honey Smith, Allison Howell and Quinton McKissick said that they enjoyed learning about how to handle medical emergencies that could occur the next time they are out in the great outdoors. Besides the normal CPR and general first aid, they learned how to administer epinephrine to an anaphylaxis (a person with an allergic reaction), to stabilize and move a person with a spine injury and to clean a wound.

The four-day course included many simulations, in which students acted as either a patient in need of medical help or as a rescuer who arrived on the scene and treated the patient. The course ended with a mass triage simulation that students had to treat. Quinton McKissick played an unconscious, deaf, lightning-strike splash-over victim. Honey Smith and two Davidson students were his rescuers; they had to resuscitate him and then treat him for a form of shock.

"The most difficult thing about treating him was the fact that he lost his hearing from the lightning strike and we had a difficult time trying to communicate with him about what we were doing and why we were there," said Smith.

Students were later administered a final exam, which they all passed. The Wilderness Activity Program (WAP) now has four WAFA-certified students to lead outdoor trips in the future.

After semester-long hiatus, Inklings coffee house reopens

by Doodle Harris
Content Editor

Last month, after a semester-long fight over the use of campus space and numerous headaches for College administrators, the Inklings coffee house officially reopened for the Spring semester of 2000.

For four years prior to this school term, Inklings was a coffee house located in the basement of Georgia Dorm. The paintings of Mark Anderson, PC's Art Department chair lined the walls, and students would gather to read poetry, listen to music and generally hang out. However, last spring, Inklings received permission to move to the Calhoun's building. Calhouns was then unused by any organization on campus and was a more spacious alternative to the basement of Georgia Dorm. Once Inklings relocated, another organization attained permission to convert the basement into a meeting place specifically for their organization. This past summer, student publications, namely the "Pac sa" and the "Blue Stocking," began their operation in Calhouns, leaving the institution previously known as Inklings without a home of its own.

Students were angered enough by this loss of a home to take action. Four seniors in particular, Cliff McKinney, Patti Carson, Carolyn Lovell and Matt Hastie fought to reopen Inklings in its former location, the basement of Georgia. With the help of Dean Nixon, Bryan Madden Brandon Liles and even President John V. Griffith, this mission was realized. Those four seniors now serve as managers and program coordinators for the facility.

"Dean Nixon recognized the need for a place like Inklings," said McKinney. "We need an alternative to the Greek scene on campus."

To commemorate the official re-opening of Inklings, musicians Travis Omerick and Kay Cooley along with guest musicians played all evening on Thursday, Feb. 3. Drew Duffy, Aaron Collier, and Andre Chizum have also contributed artwork to decorate the white-washed basement.

"Not being opened first semester had a lot of positive and negative effects," said Lovell. "The fact that Inklings was closed down in the first place pushed a lot of people's buttons, but it also gave us the chance to show the administration that Inklings is something that people need and want at PC. Inklings' not being opened also gave us the opportunity to figure out how we wanted it to run and [to] create what we hope will be a more successful Inklings."

This semester, the managers have a lot of plans for Inklings. Inklings is hosting movie viewings on Friday and Sunday nights and open mic nights for students to exhibit their poetic or musical talents. It is also serving as meeting places for Students for Environmental Education, "Figs and Thistles" and Habitat for Humanity. Last week, Inklings welcomed guest poet Judy Goldman for a poetry reading and yesterday, Inklings was the location of a "Roots" celebration, a Rave party in celebration of Black History month. A complete calendar of events is available in Inklings or from any of the managers.

"The importance of having a place like Inklings is to provide an alternative for those people who are looking for something different to do with their time," said Lovell. Part of our goal has been to provide a place for people who feel they don't have one, which, I think, is very important because a lot of people who don't fit the norm get lost around here."

"[Inklings is] a gathering place for wayward travelers," said McKinney. "Our biggest problem is that we don't offer alcohol down there. If we can get a sprinkler system, we can have alcohol like Calhouns was setup. We are trying to raise money for it right now. It's one thing that turns a lot of people off."

Bush visits PC

what we're certain of is that this administration has not done right by the military and that the morale of today's military is dangerously low. And I'm certain—as your next President, I'm certain—that an uncertain world requires a strong military. I will rebuild the military power of the United States of America. I do so to keep the peace.... This great land called America will be peacemakers."

But while Bush emphasized an activist foreign policy, he advocated a laissez-faire domestic policy, characterizing himself as a "Reformer With Results" and distancing himself from the Republican Congressional leadership in Washington in the process.

"I understand that South Carolina needs to send this message to America: it's not the government's money in the surplus; it's the people's money in the surplus," said Bush. "Tomorrow we can sound a loud message to the folks in Washington that what's risky—listen, when I laid out my plan the voices of the status quo said the plan was risky—no, here's what we think: what's risky is leaving unspent surplus in Washington, D.C.—that's risky. What's not risky is giving the people their own money back. It's conservative to cut taxes, and it's compassionate."

"Let me tell what I know my job is," said Bush. "My job this morning is to set an agenda should I become President. My job is to lift the spirits of America, to set our heights. My job is to help this country usher in the responsibility era—a culture that stands in stark contrast to the last few decades, which has clearly said if it feels good do it, and if you have a problem then blame somebody else. Well, my vision for America is that each of us understand that we are responsible for the decisions that we make in life. I recognize the limitations of government. I recognize that government should pass laws to hold all people accountable. But what government cannot do is make people love one another. You see, the great strength of our country lies in the hearts and souls of citizens who are working tance of family, I think, are very important to today's society. Like everything he says, he talks to the people, and he's very personable. He addresses all the important issues, but, at the same time, he focuses on the things that I would like. With McCain, I like some of the things he says; some of the things I don't. With George W. just about everything he says I like."

for the universal call to love your neighbor just like you would like to be loved yourself. So my job will be to rally the armies of compassion, to call upon the best of America, to begin by setting high sights and begin by behaving responsibly in the office to which I have been elected."

A number of students said that they were impressed with Bush's message.

"My family and I were big supporters of his father, and I think he has the same values," said senior Wil Elder. "His beliefs on the impor-

Freshman Jenny Berry heard Bush speak at PC after having heard the other two Republican candidates speak and said that she was impressed with Bush's message.

"I've started leaning towards Bush more so this week," said freshman Jenny Berry. "I liked some of the stuff that Alan Keyes had to say, but I didn't really agree with him on some of the issues and the points he made, and he doesn't seem to have the experience that I think should be required for the office of the Presidency. McCain I was impressed with, but I don't agree with him on some of his views, so I think I'll just stay with Bush."

Even so, Berry said that she liked McCain's rally better.

"I wasn't quite as impressed with this rally as I was with the McCain rally because the McCain rally was more of a big to do," said Berry. "I don't know if because it's the first one I attended and it was just the excitement or if it was just the time of day, but it definitely not as exciting as the first rally."

Elder, in contrast, said that he liked Bush's speech better than McCain's.

"I loved the speech," said Elder. "At the McCain speech I was right up front and cheering there too, because I wanted to be a part of the action. I really enjoyed McCain's speech, but, by comparison, Bush's speech was tenfold better."

Elder said that he didn't know what exactly why he liked the Bush speech better than the McCain speech.

"I don't know [what caught my attention], but I liked the wording," said Elder. "Did you notice that? He winked a lot. He's very passionate and he addressed some of the issues that are controversial right now."

Apparently more voters than just PC students were impressed with Bush. Bush won the South Carolina primary by a whopping 14 percentage points. After leaving South Carolina, the candidates traveled to Michigan for the next primary, which, along with the Arizona primary, was held last Tuesday. As of press time, the results of those primaries were not available.

The Republican Party will officially announce its candidate for the Presidency of the United States in August at its party convention in Philadelphia.

Greer provides "joy" for teachers, fellow students

by Amy Cooper

Always wanted to be a cheerleader, but never have? Ever been a female assistant cubmaster? Recently accepted to Yale and Princeton's graduate schools? Ashley Greer completes all of these questions.

Ashley Greer, a senior from Greenville, S.C., is a chemistry and physics major with a math minor. She is active in Sigma Kappa Alpha (vice president), Omicron Delta Kappa (vice president), American Chemical Society (president), Dr. Hobbie's Bible study, SVS program at Bailey Manor, Cub Scouts (assistant cub master) and intramurals.

"Knowing Ashley Greer and directing her in Honors Research has been one of the great joys of my career at PC," said Dr. Edward Gouge, professor of chemistry and department chair. "It takes little time being around her to realize that her gentle, pleasant personality belies a voracious, aggressive intellect. In fact I would advise anyone who plans to engage this modest soul in a battle of wits to first get their affairs in order."

When not working on her honors research in Physics and Chemistry or participating in a campus activity, Greer exercises her musical talents by playing the piano and guitar. She also enjoys crafts and horsebackriding. Her favorite movie is "Dead Poet's Society" and she loves the television shows "Designing Women," "Home Improvement" and "Golden Girls." She even tapes all three shows daily to watch when not in classes or spending time with her boyfriend.

She said that her motto in life comes from Colossians 3:23: "Whether you eat or drink or whatever you do, do it all to the glory of God."

Upon graduating from PC, Greer is taking her first trip off of the continent to England. Although she is yet to select a graduate school, she plans to get her doctorate in chemistry and become a professor at a small liberal arts college like PC. She also hopes to find herself happily married, with children and living somewhere in the South.

Greer enjoys multiple things about PC.

"I enjoy the relationships with professors and being able to have dinners and cookouts at their houses," said Greer. "I also enjoy the relationships with friends and being creative about weekend activities."

"Ashley Greer is one of the reasons I love PC," said junior Mary Pat Adams. "I met her my freshman year and immediately decided she was my role model. She's a true balance of school and fun and a walking example of class."

Staff Spotlight: Robertson enjoys challenges that PC offers

by Katie Heim
Staff Writer

South Carolina native Jack Robertson graces Presbyterian College with his ambition and enthusiasm as the head of maintenance. This challenging occupation includes heading up the grounds crew by distributing instructions to the supervisor and crew, supervising maintenance and the general upkeep of all the buildings on campus, overseeing construction projects and working with the business offices to plan projects. Robertson states that his purpose is to "ensure that our students here have a safe environment and that they are taken care of." He also wants to make sure the students feel like PC is "a home away from home."

Robertson has been a member of the staff for about ten years. Prior to coming to PC, he worked with a construction firm for fifteen years. He had known about PC all his life, but was exposed to the campus for the first time through his involvement with the Springs and Jacobs renovations, as well as the building of Edmunds.

The one down side, Robertson confesses, is "not being able to meet the expectations of everybody. You do your best and sometimes it's not enough. It's hard to feel like you've let someone down."

"I love this place and I love this job. . . . All things can be accomplished if desire and determination are there. Dreams do come true."

In 1990, Robertson was asked to join the staff of PC and the "chance for something different" attracted him. He admits that he had a "desire to be a part of PC, and it became a reality."

One of the perks of the job for Robertson is that from "day to day there's a different challenge." He also enjoys working with the other faculty and staff of PC and getting to meet stu-

A major goal Robertson achieved while at PC was the planning and execution of holding commencement outside. He expresses how it was very challenging and full of risk, but it was a huge success in the end. One of the biggest challenges Robertson had to face was the clean up following the snowstorm a few weeks ago. It was a "catastrophe," according to

Robertson, especially because of the added pressure of making the campus suitable for the arrival of Senator McCain. He accredits all success to the fact that the staff dropped everything to unify and make the campus operational again. He also thanks the students and faculty who pitched in as well.

Robertson has no plans of retiring or leaving PC anytime soon.

"I love this place and I love this job," he exclaimed, "but when the time does come to retire, he 'hopes to stay around and remain a part of the community.'"

He also has advice for all students at PC.

"All things can be accomplished if desire and determination are there. Dreams do come true," said Robertson.

Working at PC was a dream for Robertson, that eventually came true, and he could not be more thankful.

Lady Blue Hose take third-straight SAC title

by Scott Moore
Sports Writer

The two best women's teams in the South Atlantic Conference got together Wednesday, Feb. 16, 2000, and as expected, one play made the difference in the game. The Presbyterian College women's basketball team took its third straight SAC title. The title-clinching and game winning shot came from junior center Rachel Sloan. Sloan scored five points in the final 12 seconds, including a 3-pointer at the buzzer, to lift Presbyterian College, ranked fifth in the latest NCAA Division II national poll, to a 62-60 victory over homestanding Gardner-Webb University.

With the victory, the Blue Hose improve to 23-1 overall and 13-1 in the SAC and, more importantly, secure their third-straight regular-season conference championship. The second-place Lady Bulldogs, who had won eight consecutive games, fall to 14-8 and 9-5. The Lady Blue Hose have an 18 home-game winning streak and a 27 home-game winning streak over their SAC opponents.

The last-second play was set up when freshman guard Jordan Creasman hit one-of-two free throws to put Gardner-Webb up 60-59 with four seconds left. After a timeout by PC, senior guard Jill Newman inbounded the ball to junior forward Tracy Woody, who dribbled to the left side of the Lady Bulldogs' baseline and flipped the ball to Sloan in the corner. The wide-open Sloan then calmly buried the trey for the victory.

It didn't seem as though Gardner-Webb would even be close at the end as PC held a seemingly insurmountable 17 point advantage, 44-27, with 15:47 remaining in the game. But the Lady Bulldogs turned the tide with guts and hustle, knotting the score at 55 with a 28-11 run. In the sport, junior guard Vaida Turauskaitė contributed a hodgepodge of plays for eight points, five rebounds, two steals and a block. Fittingly, it was Turauskaitė's free throw that tied the game with 2:32 left.

Basketball loses to G-W, Benedict, faces Newberry tomorrow

by Jamie Lightcap
Sports Writer

It was a tough week for the Blue Hose as they lost last Wednesday and Saturday by a combined total of three points. With the two losses, the Blue Hose fell to 11-13 overall, but still hold an excellent league mark of 9-5, putting them in third place. With games remaining against SAC foes Tusculum and Newberry, the Blue Hose can easily even out their record before entering the SAC tournament.

On Wednesday, the Blue Hose traveled to Boiling Springs, N.C. to take on #20 Gardner-Webb. After beating the Bulldogs soundly in Clinton, the Blue Hose looked to force a second place tie with a win. However, the game did not start well for the Hose, as they fell 18 points down in the first half. The Blue Hose did not give up, however, and cut the lead to 13 by the end of the first half. Seventeen first half turnovers along with shooting 29% from the floor contributed greatly to the first half struggle. The second half was an entirely different story. The Blue Hose came out firing and went on an amazing run to take a two point lead. A late three by G-W guard Chas Cass gave the Bulldogs the lead for good, as they stayed off a last second shot off a steal by Jeff Whittle. The final score was 71-69. The comeback was lead by freshmen Jerry Barlow and Chuck Rayford, who had 17 and 23 points respectively. Rayford also pulled down 8 boards to lead

Two free throws by Sloan put the Blue Hose in front, but GWU sophomore center Ashley Porterfield answered with a couple of her own to bring the core back to even. Turauskaitė then stole the ball, got it on the break to Creasman, who fed sophomore forward Amanda Henderson for the layup and a 59-57 Lady Bulldog lead with 27 seconds showing.

After a PC timeout, Sloan found her way through the Gardner-Webb defense for a layup, tying the game at 59-59, and a foul on Blue Hose senior guard Heather Couch set the stage for Creasman's free throw and Sloan's game-winner.

Porterfield and Turauskaitė each tallied 14, and Henderson contributed 10 for the Runnin' Lady Bulldogs. Woody and Sloan paced all scorers with 16 points apiece, and sophomore Toni Leopold added 13 to complete the Blue Hose double-figure scorers.

The loss spoiled a special night for Turauskaitė, who was recognized during halftime of the men's game for scoring 1,000 points during her three-year career.

Sloan's shot gave the team its third straight SAC regular-season championship. However, PC was only the second team in women's basketball conference history to win three straight titles. This title was only the first time in the program's history that the team has collected an outright season championship. The past two years they have shared the title with Carson-Newman College (1997-98) and Wingate University (1998-99).

The remainder of the season holds a Feb. 26 game at Newberry College and the Food Lion South Atlantic Conference Tournament. The team will host the first round here in Templeton Center, and their opponent will be announced later. They are looking to perform well in the tournament as they are the defending title-holders from the past two years.

The Lady Blue Hose played on Feb. 23 against Tusculum College. As of press time scores and stats were unavailable.

On Saturday, the Hose traveled to Columbia, S.C., the home of senior Mac Harper, to take on non-conference foe Benedict College. The first half was characterized by great defense from both teams as the Hose shot 30% and the Tigers shot 29%. Offensive rebounds from Benedict helped the Tigers forge a slim half-time lead of 27-24. An exciting second half saw both teams shooting the ball well and the lead changing hands many times. By the end of regulation, the Blue Hose had pulled even with the Tigers at 64. An exciting overtime period saw the Hose score first, but eventually fall behind on a free-throw from Tiger guard Michael Hutto. The Hose had one last chance as Whittle threw a full court pass to DJ. Humphries who missed a tough shot as the buzzer sounded. The final was 76-75. The Hose were led again in scoring by Rayford, who poured in 22 points. Whittle and Barlow both added 11 points while Humphries was able to score 10 points. Home town favorite Mac Harper led the team in rebounds with 7. Point guard Kevin Campbell played an excellent game recording 9 assists while committing only 1 turnover.

The Blue Hose are poised to make a late season run in the SAC tournament. The Hose took on SAC foe Tusculum College this past Wednesday in the final home game of the season. As of press time, no stats were available. Tomorrow the Hose take on Newberry College at Newberry. The SAC Tournament begins next week.

Baseball team beats Augusta State, Pfeifer; loses series to L-R

by Jack Carmody
Sports Writer

The PC baseball team is once again revved up for another season. The Blue Hose are looking to improve on their 32-25 overall record from last year. Leading the team this year are senior captains Ty Bouknight, Jeremy Joyner and Brad Teal. Bouknight and Joyner are both former All-South Atlantic Conference (SAC) selections, while Teal is ranked as one of the best defensive catchers in the conference.

On Feb. 9, the team made their way to Augusta, Ga. to take on the number 12-ranked ranked Augusta State Jaguars. PC pitchers Michael Burns and Mike Noble owned the Jaguars, combining for a seven hit shutout. Teal had two hits and one RBI in the day. Senior shortstop Jamie Carter knocked in two runs with a double in the sixth inning. PC won the game 3-0.

On Feb. 12, PC had its first home game of the season, taking on Pfeifer University. PC won 3-1 behind the performance of pitcher Kevin Felts, who went the distance for the complete game victory. Felts gave up only four hits and struck out seven batters. PC took the lead when senior first basemen Bucky O'Hara hit an RBI single in the bottom of the fifth inning. PC tacked on their final run when third baseman Evan McDonald homered in the sixth inning.

The next day, the team faced a double header with Pfeifer. PC won both games convincingly, 23-4 and 12-2. PC put away the Falcons with an amazing eleven run fifth inning.

Joyner won his first game of the season, pitching five strong innings, allowing only five hits and one earned run. He also tallied four strikeouts. Junior Bryan Betsill closed the deal, picking up the save.

Senior designated hitter Brian Richie was three-for-four, knocking in two runs and scoring three times. Teal also went three-for-four with two RBIs.

PC continued their domination in the second game. PC scored three runs in the first and five runs in the second and never looked back. Sophomore outfielder Turco went two-for-two with three runs scored. Bouknight was two-for-four with two RBIs and two runs scored. Starting pitcher Dudley won his first game this year pitching six innings and allowing just two earned runs on five hits.

O'Hara's performance against Pfeifer helped him earn SAC weekly honors. O'Hara finished the week batting .357, including two doubles, one triple and nine RBIs.

The Blue Hose have hit a slump as of late. Over the weekend, in Hickory, NC, PC lost to Lenoir-Rhyne three times. PC lost both games of the double header on Saturday 15-5 and 10-8. In the first game, PC an early 2-1 lead in the top of the third when Bouknight doubled. Their lead was cut short, however, when the Bears scored five in the bottom half of the inning. Felts took the loss, going four and two-thirds of an inning.

Noble took the loss in the second game. Bright spots for PC included a two run double by Carter and RBI singles by right fielder Turco and leftfielder Hurst. O'Hara also added an RBI triple.

PC gave the Bears more of a challenge in the third game. The Blue Hose started the game by scoring two runs in the first. Hurst led off, getting hit by a pitch. He scored on a Bouknight single. Bouknight scored on a fielders choice by Teal. Teal scored when O'Hara singled. The Bears fought back to take the lead with three runs in the sixth. PC tied the score when third baseman McDonald doubled in the top half of the seventh. Lenior Rhyne broke the tie in the bottom half of the seventh with a run and went on to win 6-4.

PC is off to a solid start, posting a 6-5 record through their eleven seven games.

"The strength of our team is our pitching, but to win games our hitting is going to have to carry us," said sophomore Keagan Broussard.

PC plays a pair of games at home this weekend against conference rival Gardner-Webb.

Blue Hose softball team opens season with double-header vs. Emmanuel College; faces Lees-McRae tomorrow

by Anne Sullivan
Sports Writer

As the 2000 women's softball season gets underway at Presbyterian College, the young team is poised to enter the new millennium with a bang. With only one returning senior and a new coach, the Lady Blue Hose have a tough schedule and season ahead of them. The 2000 roster includes the following women: senior Angie Mullins, juniors Sonya McNeil, Christi Smith, Monica Choplin, Jamie Carter and Ross Stewart, sophomores Beth Pearson, Jennifer Henderson, Amanda Williamson, Sherril Sullivan and Gwen Shealy and freshmen Jana Waters and Beth Rocker.

This season marks a milestone for the PC softball program. This is head coach Lisa Pearce's first season with the Lady Blue Hose. Coach Pearce attended Georgia State University, earning a bachelor's degree in Health and Physical Education. During her years at Georgia State, Pearce played for "The Heat" softball team in the women's class A open division. Prior to coaching at PC, Pearce was the head softball coach at Sandy Creek High School in Tyrone, Ga. There, Pearce's lastpitch softball team won the 1997 and 1998 AAA State Championships. Pearce won Region Coach of the Year both of those years, as well. Pearce was nominated for the J.C. Penney's Female High School Coach of the Year Award and for the 1999 High School Female Coach of the Year for the state of Georgia.

Joining Pearce on the softball coaching staff are two assistant coaches, Laurie Shepard and Buster Sturkie. Coach Shepard is a 1995 graduate of Florida State University, where she lettered all four years with the Lady Seminole softball team. Before coming to PC, Shepard coached the woman's last pitch class A softball team, the "Dublin Bullets". This is Shepard's first year with Presbyterian College.

Coach Sturkie is the only returning coach for the Lady Blue Hose this year. This is Sturkie's third season with PC and his second as an assistant coach. Sturkie interned as head coach during the 1999 season.

The Lady Blue Hose opened their 2000 season with a home double-header against Emmanuel College at the PC softball complex. PC lost both games 2-1 and 3-2 respectively.

In the bottom of the fourth, Blue Hose centerfielder McNeil tripled to right field and then came home on a Rocker double

That was all the scoring that PC could muster, however.

The Lady Lions' Eaverson picked up her first win of the season, while PC's Smith was charged with the loss.

In the second game, PC took a 2-0 lead in the third inning on a Carter infield single, which scored Waters and Rocker. That lead held until the sixth inning when Lady Lions centerfielder Amanda Blakely laced a two-run double to centerfield to tie the game.

In the top of the seventh Emmanuel's Amy Craft scored on a PC error for a 3-1 Lady Lion lead. PC got out of the inning on a great play at the plate when rightfielder Mullins nailed Blakely at the plate with catcher Henderson making the tag.

The Lady Blue Hose's record falls to 0-2 overall and 0-0 in the South Atlantic Conference. Last year they had a record of 10-4 in the conference. The team has three more games in the month of February: February 26 against Lees-McRae, February 27 against USC-Spartanburg (rescheduled from an earlier date due to inclement weather) and February 29 against Limestone College. The Lady Blue Hose face a tough series against SAC opponents in the months of March and April.

"We have been through a lot together and that's only made us stronger," said sophomore Shealy. "We have got the talent and the heart to take it all the way this year. I am really excited about our season! We have a great coaching staff, a great group of freshmen and no limitations on our success."

The Rear End: Bush Visits PC, distributes midwife propaganda

by Joe Evans and Ben Thomas Humor Columnists

Picture this scene: ten years from now, you're anywhere but in a hospital and you're giving birth. . . who do you want by your side? A doctor, with a mere three years of intensive medical school experience, as well as a residency at a prestigious (but not really) hospital, or a MIDWIFE, who is so experienced that she is able to post educational brochures in the PC student center? For options' sake, you could also have Ed Bianchi with a pair of gardening gloves--so if you want that, you can choose Ed over the previous two options. However, 12 people surveyed said that they would (of course) not be pregnant at all, because they were guys--but the rest said that they would want only a midwife.

Does this not make sense? Well, we're really not that sure--the authors of this article were "hard-core" midwife oppressors until just a few days ago, when we were eavesdropping on a rather heated debate about the advantages and bad things that are intrinsic elements of midwifery. The debate was instigated by a certain brochure (which really is posted in Springs amid the George W. Bush campaign literature), which we shall refer to only as "My Midwife: Wave of the Future, Traditions of the Past"--a brochure which flagrantly inserted a hatching chicken on its front cover, an issue of confusion for the authors, who were under the impression that perhaps she hatched chickens, not babies.

Nevertheless, the argument concerned a few select passages from the brochure. One such passage: "This is your uterus on drugs. . . unmedicated means safe!" Further passages: "Did you say midwife?-- Oh yeah, I said midwife," "Ouch! That hurts!", and "The 'Jones's' are still making payments on their cesarean section surgery (If your name is Jones, this does not apply!)." Intrepid sleuths that the authors of this article are, we were able to transcribe the entire conversation (except for some racy comments about edible flannel), the entirety of which will be published here: "I think midwives are tops!"

"NO! I've got two quotations for you on midwives. First, Natalie Smith of UGA, when asked about midwives, said 'No, thanks.' Second, Will Shelburne told me just yesterday, 'My mom used a midwife and that's why I have this horribly disfigured ring finger so I can't give fingerprints! So now I just tell people it was an allergic reaction to a Band-Aid...and, uh, my midwife scarred me for life!!!!'"

"Will said that? He told me it was either leprosy or a really bad paper cut."

"Yep...well, it's not leprosy. It's the scourge of the earth--midwives and their injuries."

"I still disagree. I've got this great pamphlet, 'My Midwife: Wave of the Future, Traditions of the Past,' and it says that midwives are 'armed with patience,' and that they have equipment for things. It also says that 'Stewart' is the five standards of safe childbearing!"

"Stewart? Just Stewart?"

"That's right. He's all five of them." (Authors' note: We didn't understand this part of the conversation either.)

"Wow, that's pretty convincing. Maybe I will give them a call."

As you, the reader, have probably already conjectured, the authors were just as convinced as the originally anti-midwife polemicist. We have since pledged ourselves to heightening awareness of midwifery here at PC College. That's why we think all students should stop by Springs Campus Center and local historical markers and pick up their own copies of "My Midwife," soon to be the most powerful piece of propaganda since "Common Sense." And that's what it is: it's common sense to use a midwife, given their use of equipment and patience and hot water. We're sure that Thomas Paine, if pregnant today, would not only choose to use a midwife, but would think long and hard about midwifery in colonial days, then probably write a pamphlet or something.

Correction Last week the Rear End repeatedly misspelled Ed Bianchi's name. The correct spelling is MICKEY O'SHEIDS. We would like to apologize for any confusion this may have caused. The further correction concerns the editor's note at the end of the article, which we found to be spurious in nature. The "Blue Stocking," contrary to what was stated, explicitly supports and believes with all of its heart everything written in the article. . . except for Ed Bianchi's misspelled name.

In response to Gov. Bush's midwifery propaganda, Sen. John McCain asserted that he is the real candidate of midwifery. Bush countered by stating that he is the compassionate midwifery candidate.

"That's right. He's all five of them." (Authors' note--We didn't understand this part of the conversation either.)

"Wow, that's pretty convincing. Maybe I will give them a call."

As you, the reader, have probably already conjectured, the authors were just as convinced as the originally anti-midwife polemicist. We have since pledged ourselves to heightening awareness of midwifery here at PC College. That's why we think all students should stop by Springs Campus Center and local historical markers and pick up their own copies of "My Midwife," soon to be the most powerful piece of propaganda since "Common Sense." And that's what it is: it's common sense to use a midwife, given their use of equipment and patience and hot water. We're sure that Thomas Paine, if pregnant today, would not only choose to use a midwife, but would think long and hard about midwifery in colonial days, then probably write a pamphlet or something.

Correction Last week the Rear End repeatedly misspelled Ed Bianchi's name. The correct spelling is MICKEY O' SHIELDS. We would like to apologize for any confusion this may have caused. The further correction concerns the editor's note at the end of the article, which we found to be spurious in nature. The "Blue Stocking," contrary to what was stated, explicitly supports and believes with all of its heart everything written in the article. . . except for Ed Bianchi's misspelled name.

In response to Gov. Bush's midwifery propaganda, Sen. John McCain asserted that he is the real candidate of midwifery. Bush countered by stating that he is the compassionate midwifery candidate.

Henley requests task force to study student spiritual needs

by Hank Coleman
Associate Editor

What makes Presbyterian College a religious school? Does the College get to claim that distinction just because it has a religious name? Does the college support the students' religious needs on campus?

Presbyterian College's chaplain, Dr. Gregory Henley, challenged President Griffith and the Board of Trustees at their meeting a few weeks ago to look into ways that the college could increase the incoming freshmen's awareness of religious activities on campus.

"The proposal I made was simply for the president of the college to look at ways to better fulfill the spiritual needs of our students," said Henley. "I'm not sure if the president is going to appoint a committee to look into the matter. He may do nothing right away. It is up to him."

Griffith could not be reached for comment.

Dr. Henley's proposal specifically informed and warned the Board of Trustees that an off-campus group, Campus Outreach, is coming onto campus and into dorms. The group is led by two full-time campus ministers paid by Presbyterian Church in America (PCA) churches from Clinton and Greenville. Presbyterian College is affiliated with the Presbyterian Church USA and not the PCA.

"I raised the issue to the Board of Trustees because I felt that it needed to be raised," said Henley. "We have churches of other denominations sending full-time ministers who are not seminary trained or ordained to a campus that already has a full-time chaplain. The college needs to look at and think about setting boundaries for religious organizations. And, we need to figure out what they need to be."

Currently, Campus Outreach is an independent organization that is not recognized by the College. The group meets off-campus every week in a private home. The group has been accused by Henley and others of having a narrow and self-centered view on the Christian faith, of banning people from meetings who do not uphold their strict values and of proselytizing students in the dorms.

In recent years I have noticed more and more of our students attending an off-campus group known as Campus Outreach Weekly (COW). Henley reported to the Board of Trustees: "Also, the PCA church has hired two full-time campus workers to develop this ministry on PC's campus. Neither of the workers is seminary trained. By befriending PC students and inviting them to COW meetings, the workers gain entrance into residence halls where Bible studies are conducted in student rooms. Many students who become involved in COW also attend a six-week indoctrination session conducted at the beach each summer. These students often return to campus possessing a narrower vision of the Christian faith and of Christian community. For many of these students, faith becomes cozy, well defined, and self-centered."

This past Monday night Henley commented further on one concern he has about COW.

From the Board of Trustees Briefing:
In recent years I have noticed more and more of our students attending an off-campus group known as Campus Outreach Weekly (COW). A local PCA church has hired two full-time campus workers to develop this ministry on PC's campus. Neither of the workers is seminary trained. By befriending PC students and inviting them to COW meetings, the workers gain entrance into the residence halls where Bible studies are conducted in student rooms. Many students who become involved in COW also attend a six-week indoctrination session conducted at the beach each summer. These students often return to campus possessing a narrower vision of the Christian faith and of Christian community. For many of these students, faith becomes cozy, well defined, and self-centered.

I have asked the president to appoint a task force to study and make recommendations on how the college might be more supportive of freshmen students' spiritual needs, especially during the fall semester.

Gregory E. Henley
Chaplain

"[My] concern is that the spiritual needs for the campus are being defined by a denomination that believes that God does not call women to ordained ministry," said Henley.

The Chaplain feels that COW should be held accountable and that the best way to do that would be to have a faculty advisor. Only four groups are recognized as religious organizations by Presbyterian College: Fellowship of Christian Athletes, Westminster Fellowship, Newman's Club, and the Baptist Student Union. The Canterbury Club is currently inactive.

The leaders of Campus Outreach declined to give a comment for this article, but COW member and senior PC student Bryan Riddle discussed the organization's ministry.

"Campus Outreach is just a tool we use to minister the gospel, just like FCA, Westminster Fellowship, and the other groups are tools to deliver a message," said Riddle. "It doesn't matter whether the group is on campus or off. Everyone has a responsibility to minister Christianity to others. Hopefully all the groups on campus are giving the students the same message about Christ, but the only difference is that it is ministered in a different way."

"There has been a perception by students that I have talked to around campus that there has been an inquisition against Campus Outreach Weekly by the Chaplain's office, and that is just not the case," said Henley. "The proposal was simply to look at ways to be more proactive in educating the incoming freshmen classes about the religious opportunities here on campus."

A few weeks ago several students tried to unify the campus' religious groups with the first meeting of the group, PC One. For a whole week, religious groups across campus were asked to cancel their meetings and attend a week long worship with singing, scripture reading, reflection by speakers and prayer. The organizers of the event are hoping to make it a yearly occurrence. PC One's goal was to harness Presbyterian College's religious faith into one group, but some people would argue that occurs already.

"There are a lot of chances to get involved spiritually on campus, but students just aren't taking advantage of the opportunities that are out there," said sophomore Rachel Jernigan.

Dr. Henley agreed.

"We have opportunities for the PC community to come together on a regular basis to worship through Sunday Night Service and

POINT

Lock your door today? How about upholding the Honor Code today?

Any PC students who lives in the residence halls have doubtlessly seen the numerous signs posted throughout the dorms warning students to lock their doors. One sign reads: "Have you locked your door today?" Another one asks: "Ever been woken up in the middle of the night by a stranger going through your stuff?"

Any accepted students who visited the residence halls last weekend doubtlessly also saw the signs. One can only imagine the enthusiasm and pride that these students must have felt for PC's much-touted honor system after reading such delightful notices about campus security.

We don't doubt that such notices are necessary. It is indeed unfortunate that notices about theft had to be posted immediately before accepted students weekend, but theft in the residence halls has been a recurring problem this semester, according to both residence life staff and public safety officers. We hope that the notices in the dorms may inspire students to lock their doors and, consequently, reduce the number of thefts on campus.

Yet we at the "Blue Stocking" wonder why the notices are necessary. Why, we ask, is there a problem with theft in the first place? Why, when we have a student-initiated and student-enforced honor system, do some students blatantly violate the honor code? Why are students no longer able to rest at ease knowing that their personal belongings will be safe?

We at the "Blue Stocking" would like to keep our stuff in our rooms without foregoing sleeping at night or locking ourselves out of our rooms. Therefore, we encourage students to uphold the honor code that defines our institution.

MY TURN: DAN HART

Over the past few weeks I have been reading the memoirs of the late Mississippi writer Willie Morris in his book "North Towards Home." I have been particularly interested in Morris's account of his experiences as editor-in-chief of the student newspaper at the University of Texas during the early fifties, when college journalists frequently butted heads with a repressive university administration and a complacent student body that was, in Morris's words, bogged down in "the corporate mentality" over integration, academic freedom and other issues that would become explosive in the more radical decade that followed.

Certainly PC in the early twentieth century is a far cry from UT in the mid twentieth century. But I do wonder if perhaps Morris's criticism of "the corporate mentality" might not be applicable to us at PC.

Just as diversity can take many forms—racial diversity, geographic diversity, socioeconomic diversity, etc.—so too can the corporate mentality. It can express itself as rigid conformity to a certain style of dress, a certain style of behavior, a certain style of thought or a certain style of worship. In all the various ways that it is expressed, it is always intolerant of those who do not conform.

Fear that the current controversy over Campus Outreach threatens to draw us into this corporate mentality. Like any issue, there are two sides to this one. I am not a member of the organization, nor am I a member of the PCA. I am, in fact, a proud member of the PCUSA, and I do not agree with all the theological tenets of either the PCA or of Campus Outreach. But I recognize that not all people share my church preferences and that some people may very well have compelling theological arguments for positions that are different from mine. In fact, even though I may seek other avenues for spiritual growth, I have been blessed by hearing about the ways that Campus Outreach has enriched the faith of some PC students. It is my duty as a Christian to faithfully seek the truth with other believers—even those who may disagree with me—rather than to insist that faith is "copy, well defined, and self-contained."

I can score a big victory for diversity by agreeing to disagree.

This will serve as my last President's Column. I have enjoyed speaking with you each issue about the progress we have made on your concerns and vision for the campus.

Our year has been exciting. Last year, at the close of exams, the members of the SGA went on a retreat and set our goals. We could have set easy goals, but, instead, we set high goals—the result, many exciting accomplishments have marked our year. Unfortunately, in this last address to you I cannot report that we have accomplished everything. Am I upset about this? Not at all. So much was accomplished in the fall that we had to add new goals so that we would have more to do! I feel that this SGA has "raised the bar" for future SGAs. We challenged the college to establish a pool of extra money for additional student programming; we have updated our Constitution; we have secured a 24-hour computer lab. These and many more accomplishments will be our legacy. We challenged the status quo, pleading with the College to establish a maintenance request web page; a web based e-mail system; dorm based printing stations and online registration and grade viewing. Some of the impacts of this SGA will not be felt this year, however, I feel confident that you will view us favorably for bringing your issues to the forefront, even if they were not accomplished this spring. Thank you for allowing us to work with and for you this year.

Despite our dedication to you, our terms are drawing to a close. It will be sad for many of us to leave our posts, but the time to move on is at hand. New leadership must step forward and pick up where we left off. Nevertheless, this is always last time to influence the direction of SGA and the College. Where would I like SGA to go next year? I do not know to say, however, I hope that SGA will continue the efforts of updating our technology from web registration to a new and current web-based e-mail system. I hope that the SGA formation will increase student programming options and will establish itself as a viable and accountable organization. I hope that the Scots Blue line will continue rolling, and that the campus climate and community issues will be a continuing focus. What are my concerns? Despite our involvement on some committees, the importance of SGA representation is frequently overlooked when college committees and task forces are formed. SGA are students, elected by the students. I feel that this is essential representation on any college committee, no matter how small the task.

I would like to close with a few sentences from my Opening Convocation address earlier this year: "We will have to apply great effort to achieve these goals—some might be too difficult to achieve. Nevertheless, I am confident, at the end of the year, our success will not be just in our achievements but in the effort, which brought about our successes and failures."

Thank you, from all of us, for your help, support and involvement this year. As elections begin and new leadership steps forward, it is easy for me to see that the future is bright for SGA next year. I wish this school and all its community members, the very best. Presbyterian is truly a "crown jewel."

Start spreading the news: Habitat for Humanity in New York, New York

by Devon Beisser
in New Rochelle, N.Y.

Right, right, New York, right, right... New York, crazy city!... Hey, could you put Phish on? Who wants to go to the city? Roller-racer-addicted Mary: Can we have a smoke break? Smoking after exercise is extremely effective... Are we stopping anytime soon? I have to go to the bathroom!... Where are you guys from? Allman Brothers tickets?

These quotations are all many things that we heard from each other during the week. Random stories behind them, all of them good.

The PC chapter of Habitat for Humanity travelled to New Rochelle, N.Y. for Spring Break. New Rochelle is approximately 35 minutes outside of Manhattan with easy access to the city—excitement for all of us living in the South. Our host group was really excited to have our group because we were the only Southern school coming for the annual Blitz weeks that Habitat offers for college students during the school year. Colleges in Illinois and Maine were also coming to New Rochelle for the following weeks during their spring breaks. The month of March is March Madness—a steal from the NCAA, but it works for Habitat.

You might be thinking, "Why New York for Spring Break instead of the beach?" Well, they were the only group that would take a group our size, give us a place to stay, and feed us on occasion for free. What more could you ask for? No, we didn't fly either—we drove the 14 hours or more in two days on the way up and on the way back. [Editor's note: trying doing that four times every academic year], staying at a church in Waldorf, Md. with an awesome fire pit on the way to New Rochelle and staying at a church in Fairfax, Va. with amazing couches on the way home. The drive was trying, but worth it. Tighter friendships were made and there was always something exciting and different going on in the vans. We stayed in Bronxville, N.Y. at a very well-to-do church and slept on a stage on squeaky cots or on the floor. But it worked. Is rest something to be received over Spring Break? I don't think it is really a necessity.

Okay, now to the work we did in New York. We actually worked on a gutted-out two-story house in Greenburgh, N.Y. It was the first time this house had been worked on by the man leading our group, getting started, therefore, was interesting. But we did get started and got more work done than we had hoped to get completed. We did the framing (that is, the foundation part for the walls) of the house on the first and second floor. The framing was hard work and took a lot of time. The walls have to be exact; there isn't room for mistakes. It was very important that we complete our work, so that the other groups coming in the next few weeks would be able to complete the walls. There was a lot of sawing, hammering, nailing (the nail gun is one of the best inventions!), and cleaning up. Because we almost finished the framing, the plumber will be able to come in and start installing the plumbing in the house.

Now to what we did for fun (because Spring Break can't be all work and no play, right?). Here were some of our enjoyments from "Habitat Journal: The Night Life": Times Square is confusing... Uptown to go north and Downtown to go south (just in case anyone is heading to the city any time soon)...

train rides into town... crazy times driving in the city in a 15 passenger van... Broadway and off-Broadway shows... flights of steps and escalators... bars and movies... the train ride—nothing like hopping on the train at 7:45 a.m. after a full night's rest (or maybe not)... going to the city when no one felt like driving... then the van driving all the kids into the city by the master driver Robert... then finding parking for a van is practically impossible, but manageable... Broadway show of the week was "Miss Saigon," which was absolutely amazing as long as Bopey didn't ruin it for you... Seeing your friends in an off-Broadway was amazing too, the show "Emily" was great (ask Joe, Mary, or Robert about that one).

Empire State Building, all 102 floors of it, at night and absolutely Great, according to Ayeesh and Cliff... Rhythm and Blues bar, free entry but pricey drinks, with the lead singer from Monks Corner, S.C., hanging out with old and new friends at Fordham University... and finally down time with going to see American Beauty... Oh, I almost forgot about the Allman Brother tickets! Did I mention that they were free, in the seventh row, and we drew forks to see who would get to go? Ask Stewart, Patti, Marc, or Joe about how good it was.

As for me, I had a great time. There is nothing that I would have rather done over break than to help other people outside of the "City that never sleeps." Prior to leaving, it was very stressful, but once we got to New York everything worked out so wonderfully. This has to be one of the more positive trips we have taken and look forward to more to come. Now it is time for the Habitat plug—meet us at the information booth on Saturday mornings at 8 a.m. to go to Greenwood with us! Give me or Robert a call beforehand.

PC IN BRIEF

SUB members attend NACA convention in Boston

BOSTON—What do three PC students, twelve inches of snow, and bands, comedians and hypnotists from all over the country have in common? They were all a part of the 2000 National Association of Campus Activities (NACA) convention in Boston, Mass. The NACA is an organization dedicated to providing leadership training and programming opportunities to students and staff from colleges and universities.

From Feb. 16-20, Ashley McAlister, Susan Roy and Maria Tomaccio, three members of this year's Student Union Board, went to Boston to soak up all the information they could as they kept out of the twenty-degree highs. Along with SUB advisor Dana Becker, the young ladies attended educational sessions on topics such as Multicultural Programming on a Predominantly White Campus, Fundraising 101, Values and Ethics in Leadership, and If It Ain't Broke Make It Even Better dealing with how to constantly improve an organization. Part of the convention featured club and lecture showcases, film screenings and a campus activities marketplace where delegates could meet with agents and performers from all areas—hypnotists, novelty acts, movie companies and much more.

These students returned to PC full of energy and enthusiasm about all they had learned. To share their excitement with everyone else, they hosted a mini-NACA convention last Sunday, Mar. 19, on the second floor of Springs. The NACA delegates couldn't promise twelve inches of snow, but they did guarantee an afternoon of sharing and brainstorming that could continue to make PC the best it can be.

PC to hold first Cancer Relay for college students in nation

Relay for Life is a 12-hour, overnight event that, through 2,800 communities across the nation, raised nearly $130 million in 1999 to benefit the American Cancer Society—making it the single biggest fund-raising event in the country. PC students have raised money for the Laurens County Relay event in the past, but the students have never been able to take part in the actual event because it is held after the spring semester ends. PC students suggested a "mini-relay" event for PC student, and, with the help of the Student Union Board and the Springs Campus Center, it will become a reality as the first activity of the 2000 Spring Fling.

According to the American Cancer Society, this event will be the first of its kind in the nation.

The Spring Fling Campus Relay will be held from 4-8 p.m. on Thursday, April 6, at the Intramural Park. The "relay" involves teams of individuals who raise money in advance of the event. On the date of the event, all team members will come to the Intramural Park. While Doug Clark and the Hot Nuts play, at least one member of each team will walk around the site at all times. Meanwhile, groups can set up their "team campsites," which will be awarded prizes for being the best decorated or having the best theme. Sodexo Marriott will close GDH for the evening and serve supper at the Spring Fling Relay.

PC junior Meg Mulkey is organizing the event. For more information, call her at ext. 8926 or the Springs Campus Center at ext. 8484.

From around the world and into your classroom: Amity students learn more about themselves, U.S. while at PC

by Scott Moore
Staff Writer

If you have studied a foreign language at PC this year then you have probably been in contact with an Amity student. There are four of them at PC this semester: Bony Rodriguez, Tom Flueckiger, Ayech Mahfoudhi and Julio Hernandez. Even if you haven't taken a foreign language class, you have probably noticed them around campus.

"The Blue Stocking" has taken this opportunity to learn more about our Amity students.

Bony Rodriguez is a native of Peru, and is one of the two Spanish assistants. Rodriguez got involved in the Amity program through her university.

Rodriguez said, "I am enjoying my time here at PC as I learn more about the North American culture and as I get to teach college students."

Rodriguez enjoys meeting the other Amities and sharing experiences and cultural backgrounds.

Tom Flueckiger, the German assistant, is from Switzerland. Flueckiger enjoys the good atmosphere at PC, and he likes the good relationships between the students and the professors.

Flueckiger said, "My experiences here at PC have been really enriching, as I have learned about many aspects of the south and the people here."

Flueckiger feels that being here has improved his English. After Flueckiger's time here, he wants to go to graduate school in either the U.S. or Switzerland.

Ayech Mahfoudhi, the French assistant, is from Tunisia in northern Africa. Mahfoudhi finds PC to be the ideal place for studying, because there are all of the facilities a student needs to succeed.

Mahfoudhi said, "I have enjoyed meeting the other Amities and learning about their cultural backgrounds and their different methods of teaching."

Mahfoudhi has enjoyed traveling to New Orleans, North Carolina, Tennessee, and other parts of the U.S. Mahfoudhi plans to study for an M.A. degree in French Literature at an American University after his time at PC.

"Julio was a great teacher," said Dr. Ellen Friedrich, assistant professor of Spanish. "I know Julio enjoyed his experience at PC. It was also

The Amities will be here and in classes for the rest of the semester.

Wednesday Morning Prayer," he said. "It is a chance for us to meet and sing a song, pray, read scripture, and have a brief reflection given by a student faculty, or staff member. I am suggesting that for people that are really serious about their Christian faith, this is one disciplined way that is being offered for them to gather with other Christians."

Sunday Night Service is a weekly church service that started over two years ago. It brings the campus together for about thirty minutes every week in Edmunds Hall Sunday's at 6 PM. The reflection on scripture is presented by a faculty or staff member. Wednesday Morning Prayer meets for only about fifteen minutes in Wyatt Chapel adjacent to Belk Auditorium. It meets Wednesday's at 7:30 am, and the scripture reflection is presented by students. Both groups are initiated and run by student committees who are always looking for help and ideas.

These worship services will run throughout the Lenten season, culminating with a Holy Week service in Edmunds on Tuesday, April 18th.

The chaplain's vision for Presbyterian College campus life is to have broader participation from across the campus spectrum of students to worship on a regular basis. "Because in worshiping, we discover who we are in light of who God is. The more of that we can do, the better off we will be," said Henley.

"Students need to be actively engaged in Christ and use all the organizations at their disposal. If they did that, then PC would truly be a more religious school," said Riddle.

Student Fellowship Choir enjoys success, will perform Sun., March 26

by Mindy Powers
Campus Life Editor

Events and groups at Presbyterian College tend to have a narrow focus that appeals to only a segment of the student population. However, the Student Fellowship Choir is helping to break down those barriers by providing quality entertainment that spans the student population.

The Student Fellowship choir is a student run vocal group that encompasses students from different backgrounds. The choir brings these students together in fellowship while providing an outlet for the many talented musicians found at Presbyterian College.

Growing by leaps and bounds in the past four years, the choir has expanded to thirty-five students who commit to rehearsals and performances on a regular basis. Senior Adrienne Sarratt conducts the choir and has helped to mold the group into a regionally recognized vocal choir.

According to a press release, "The Student Fellowship Choir is a student-motivated vocal group which offers students an experience in traditional and contemporary African American gospel music. The group provides music for college programs, various chapel services, community organizations, and church services."

The Student Fellowship Choir consists of a diverse group of students. Their primary focus is on gospel and spiritual music. Contemporary and traditional gospel music are the standard fare at the concerts.

Their concerts are a combination of uplifting and thought provoking compositions. The plethora of talent at PC is well represented in the choir where individual voices combine in beautiful melody and harmony. Sarratt explains that diversity has been a goal of the group.

"Diversity has always been a goal. We hoped to have thirty-five members by this semester and we have achieved it," says Sarratt. The Student Fellowship Choir has also allowed several Amity students to participate in the extra-curricular life at Presbyterian College. This participation has expanded the choir's diversity and has given a unique perspective to the choir.

The Student Fellowship Choir has performed at several campus events over the past year. Most recently they performed at the Martin Luther King Jr. celebration as well as the African American student overnighter.

In the past several months, the choir has traveled around the region performing at churches in Atlanta, Greenville, Newberry, and other local venues. In addition, the choir traveled with Dr. Griffith to Charleston the weekend of February 25th to perform at a recruiting event.

Senior Carolyn Lovell says that the Student Fellowship Choir has been a highlight of the past four years at Presbyterian College.

"I love it," said Lovell. "Rehearsals are the highlight of my week. It's a great opportunity for wonderful and uplifting fellowship."

Sarratt has conducted the Student Fellowship Choir for the past three years. She said that the choir was one of the reasons that she chose to attend PC.

"It has been the best experience," said Sarratt. "However long God wants to use me is how long I want to do it."

The Student Fellowship Choir performs this Sunday, Mar. 26 at 7:30 p.m. in Edmunds Hall.

Pearson involved in service, struggle for diversity

by Scott Moore
Staff Writer

Senior Jackie Pearson is well immersed in the Presbyterian College community. His activities show his allegiance to and pride in PC, and they exhibit his dream to leave PC a better place than it was when he first came here four years ago.

Pearson is a resident of Spartanburg, S.C., where he attended Chapman High School. Pearson started his PC career playing football for the Blue house as wide receiver, and since his first days on campus, he has become involved in intramurals, the Multicultural Student Union, Student Volunteer Services, Project Understanding, the Minority Advisory Council, Student Union Board (Movie Committee), the Resident Assistant program and the African-American Student Overnighter. Pearson's activities with SVS include tutoring and serving on the staff for Special Olympics.

As a political science major and African American studies minor, Pearson plans to first go to law school and become a corporate or criminal lawyer, then to enter politics, and then become the President of the United States. Pearson has applied to both Wake Forest School of Law and the Thurgood Marshall School of Law.

Pearson said that his greatest accomplishment at PC will be when his graduation. While he looks forward to leaving PC, Pearson will miss the friends that he has made, the late night talks, and the video games. Pearson does say that he rush into anything, and that everything happens for a reason," said Pearson.

In his own terms Pearson describes himself with two words: "amazingly con-will not miss the food in GDH or Potty's loud mouth.

Pearson's fondest memories about PC have been during his senior year, as he notices all of the changes on campus, and has been a part of the struggle for a more diverse PC.

"My advice for those that I am leaving at PC is to manage your time, don't be confident."

"If I could do it again, I would come to PC for the education, but not because of the social options and diversity," said Pearson. He said that he believes that PC has too few minorities, and that there is an extreme lack of diversity in the campus.

Pearson's latest attempt at promotto the campus and spend the night with someone at PC.

"I am always impressed by the turnout, and how the PC students come together. So the kids can see others like them succeeding and willing to help," said Pearson. "AASO is a highlight of my year."

Watts welcomes students to GDH with smile

by Tara Sluder
Staff Writer

She sits behind the little table in GDH everyday, wiping ID cards for students and offering a warm smile to each one as they pass. We see her in Springs from time to time as well, still with the same smile and kind words. This smiling face belongs to Mattie Watts, a member of the PC family and a favorite among students.

In addition to being a checker in GDH, Watts also works in Springs. She can be seen behind the counter at Starbucks, the Sub Connection or even the register. The catering service supervised by Maxine Smith, Watts' sister, also receives help from Watts from time to time. She has been at PC for six years performing a job that she loves.

"I just enjoy being around the students," said Watts. "It makes my day when they come in here laughing and talking."

Watts grew up in Clinton, a town that she takes pride in calling home. She was raised by her parents in the country on a farm, along with her other siblings. The youngest of five children, Watts says she had a beautiful childhood and appreciates the strict upbringing she received from her parents.

Today Watts resides in Clinton with her mother and eleven year old son Joshua. Her older son, a football player, is a freshman at a college in North Carolina. Watts is very proud of her sons, who both play sports, and wishes nothing more than for them to be able to attend and finish college.

"I never had the opportunity to go to college," said Watts. "I want my boys to be able to finish college and do something to help others."

Watts loves dancing and walking. She spends a lot of her time with her son, often bike-riding with him. She also enjoys parties, movies and gospel singing. Watts takes Sundays off from work to be able to attend church and spend time with her family.

Although Watts has never been married, it is definitely a possibility in the near future.

Before coming to PC, Watts worked at Whitten Center for ten and a half years. At the center Watts worked with a small group of mildly retarded children. While there she learned a lot about how to care for the mentally retarded. After a while, however, she was ready for a change. Her path eventually led her to PC.

Watts clearly enjoys her work at PC. She gets along well with her co-workers and speaks highly of the Blue Ladies.

"I just love the Blue Ladies to death," said Watts. "They work so hard and are just so sweet. They are willing to help with anything."

In addition to having a good relationship with her fellow workers, Watts also gets along well with and enjoys talking to the students.

"Sometimes they confide in me," said Watts. "I try to encourage them by telling them what I always tell my boys: you can do anything you put your mind to, don't ever give up."

Watts' hard work and kind nature are certainly not overlooked by the students whose days are made a little brighter by her.

Women's basketball season ends in heartbreaker vs. Francis Marion

by Jamie Lightcap
Sports Writer

The Lady Blue Hose ended a magical season with a very tough loss to Francis Marion in the semifinals of the South Atlantic Regional. Because of a great year and a record of 28-1, the Lady Blue Hose were given the honor of the #1 seed and hosting the tournament. With the #1 seed, the ladies received a first round bye, moving them directly into the semifinals. Francis Marion won Thursday and earned the right to challenge the Blue Hose for a trip to the finals.

A slow start for the Lady Blue Hose allowed the Lady Patriots to pull out to an early 12 point lead with 12:38 remaining in the half. However, the veteran Blue Hose would not go away and battled back by the end of the first half to hold a slim two point lead. Sophomore Toni Leopard led the Blue Hose surge to the lead 18 points in the first half alone. Foul trouble the team and kept junior leader Rachel Sloan on the bench for most of the first half.

As the second half began, the momentum the Hose had accumulated in the first half continued, as they surged to an 11 point lead with 14:37 due to a 16-7 run. Senior guard Jill Neumann keyed the push with timely 3-point shooting. However, the lead was not safe, and with 3:06 left to play, Francis Marion drew even. The two teams battled back and forth, but the Lady Patriots took the lead with 0:57 on two foul shots. These shots were awarded due to a controversial blocking foul. With both Sloan and sophomore center Merritt Misner having fouled out, the Blue Hose had to rely on the outside shooting. As time expired, senior Neumann had a good look at a three but missed due to heavy defense. This last shot was also highly controversial as it appeared that Neumann may have been bumped.

The Lady Patriots were led by senior forward Jennifer Brabson who poured in 27 points. The Lady Patriots outrebounded the Hose 49-29 with 20 offensive rebounds. Leopard led the Blue Hose with 28 points and 7 rebounds. Senior Neumann continued her torrid three-point shooting with four 3's and 20 total points. Senior Heather Couch led the game with 6 assists.

Congratulations to the Blue Hose on a wonderful year and the "Blue Stocking" looks forward to what is in store for the year to come.

Softball struggles early in the season

by Jack Carmondy
Sports Writer

Although not apparent from their record, the PC softball team has been fighting hard all season. The Lady Blue Hose have a 5-14 record through their first nineteen games.

On March 1, PC dropped both games of a doubleheader to Lander, 5-3 and 12-3. In the first game Lander took the lead in the third inning, scoring two runs. PC rallied in the fifth to tie the game at 2-2. However, Lander knocked in two runs in the sixth and one in the seventh to take the lead 5-3. Freshman first baseman Lana Waters had an impressive performance at the plate, going two for four. Sophomore Beth Pearson took the loss, going seven innings and giving up five runs. In the second game, the Senators jumped on PC early, scoring eight runs in the first inning. Pearson showed her versatility, going two for three at the plate and also pitching two innings in relief. Sophomore pitcher Christi Smith was the losing pitcher for PC. The Lady Senators improved to 13-4 overall while the Blue Hose fall to 5-10 on the season.

PC had a stellar performance in the South Atlantic Invitational in Rock Hill, S.C. PC won seven of their first eight games. Pearson was named to the All-Tournament Team. She finished the tournament with a 1.84 earned run average and eleven strikeouts. She also batted .368, with seven hits, one of those being a home run.

Over break, the Blue Hose traveled to Florida to play a series of games. On March 9, PC played in doubleheader against North Florida in the North Florida Tournament. The Blue Hose played a tight first game. UNF starter Trisha Davis threw a two-hit shutout. Pearson suffered the loss, her eighth game of the year, going six innings and allowing three earned runs. Outfielder Sonya McNeil and third baseman Ross Stewart both had hits for PC. The UNF ended up winning the game 3-0. The ladies did not far as well in the second game. PC lost 14-2. Junior shortstop Jamie Carter was a perfect two for two on the day and had one RBI. Smith took the loss for PC, dropping her record to 1-4.

PC played two games in the Saint Leo College Tournament. On March 10, PC took on St. Leo University in Tampa. PC lost in a heartbreaker, 3-1. The ladies were unable to figure out St. Leo starting pitcher Lacey Hardesty. She pitched the whole game, allowing one earned run on only four hits, while adding four strikeouts. Catcher Jennifer Henderson, Waters, and outfielder Amanda Williamson all had hits for PC. Pearson pitched valiantly for the Blue Hose, going all eight innings, allowing only two earned runs and six hits.

Two days later, the team faced Nova Southeastern University. NSU got out of the shoot early, scoring seven runs in the first. The Blue Hose were unable to overcome that early deficit, losing the game 12-0. On the bright side, Henderson, right fielder Angie Mullins, Pearson, second baseman Gwen Shealy, and Waters all tallied hits for PC. Pitcher Christi Smith was the losing pitcher.

Sherril Sullivan is very encouraged by the teams' play.

"Coach Pearce's toughoff season training program is starting to pay off," said Sullivan.

"We are really coming together as a team and should be peaking towards the play-offs."

PC plays Mars Hill at home on March 29, and travels to Bowling Springs to take on Gardner Webb March 31.

Baseball team sweeps Newberry in three-game series

by Anne Sullivan
Sports Writer

The signs of spring time are popping up all over the Presbyterian College campus. Trees are blossoming, people are soaking up sun on the quad, and the sound of cracking bats and fans cheering can be heard coming from the baseball field. Yes, it's baseball time again.

The Blue Hose baseball team has gotten into full swing this season, with an overall record of 20-11. While most of us were enjoying ourselves over spring break, the Blue Hose were hard at work. The team accumulated five wins over the week of spring break, beating Catawba twice (9-4, 13-6), Limestone (6-4), Kennesaw State (2-1) and Southern Indiana (5-3).

After Spring Break, the Hose banged out 21 hits in 47 at-bats to score 17 runs en route to a 17-5 victory and a three-game sweep of the Indians of Newberry College last Sunday afternoon.

The Indians took an early 1-0 lead in the first inning, but the game was controlled by the Blue Hose from that point on. PC scored three or more runs in each of the first four innings to take a 14-1 lead entering the fifth inning. The Blue Hose added three more runs in the next two innings, while the Indians could only muster four runs down the stretch against PC's reserves.

PC starting pitcher Michael Burns took command early, pitching five innings and allowing only one earned run on four hits. The junior improved to 5-0 on the season after striking out eight batters while giving up only two walks. PC sent four different pitchers to the mound to finish the game as they allowed four runs, three earned, on six hits.

The Blue Hose sent 47 batters to the plate on the day, led by senior catcher Brad Teal, who went four-for-four with two runs scored and four RBIs. Senior first baseman Bucky O'Hara went three-for-five with two RBIs, while six other Blue Hose batters picked up two hits.

PC improved to 20-11 overall and 6-7 in the SAC, while Newberry fell to 10-21 overall and 4-8 in the SAC.

In game #1 of the series, which was played Saturday, PC ace Kevin Fells went six innings, allowing three runs on eight hits to improve his record to 4-3 on the season. Fells struck out seven batters and allowed only three of those hits after the third inning. Sophomore hurler Mark Dudley picked up his second save of the season after throwing three innings of hitless relief.

PC got the bulk of its offense from the hot bat of junior third baseman Evan McDonald, who went three-for-four at the plate with two home runs, three runs scored and four RBIs.

Sophomore second baseman Brad Hurst and senior first baseman Bucky O'Hara each added two hits on four at-bats.

Game #2 saw PC's starting pitcher Matt Martunas dominate the game going five and one-third innings allowing three runs, two earned on two hits while striking out nine batters. Martunas improves to 2-2 on the season while junior pitcher Mike Noble picked up his team-best sixth save of the season after pitching 1.2 innings of relief, and not allowing a hit.

PC was led at the plate by Hurst who went three-for-three with three runs scored and two RBIs, while senior outfielder Ty Bouknight went two-for-four with two RBIs and a double. Senior leftfielder Brian Richie picked up his third home run of the season with two RBIs in two at-bats.

The Blue Hose baseball team has a very powerful roster this season, with many returning upper-classmen and a freshmen class full of offensive and defensive talent.

"We have a very close team," said senior Jamie Carter. "Everyone is looked upon to make a contribution."

This is Coach Doug Kovash's seventh season with the Blue Hose. He holds a six year record of 174-142-2. Kovash has led his Blue Hose baseball team to six 20-win seasons of the last 12 years of baseball at Presbyterian.

Coach Kovash was named the 1998 SAC Coach of the Year for taking the Blue Hose to the NCAA Division II South Regionals for the first time in school history.

Joining Coach Kovash this season is first year Blue Hose Assistant Coach Jeremy Farber. Before joining the coaching staff at Presbyterian, Farber was the assistant coach at Tulane University, helping his team earn a 48-17 record. Prior to coaching at Tulane, Farber was the assistant coach at Gulf Coast Community College in Panama City, Fl. with a 41-19 record. Coach Farber will specialize with the teams hitters, infielders, and baserunners. In addition to coaching, Coach Farber will serve as the teams recruiting coordinator.

Last season the Blue Hose had their third straight 30 plus win season with a record of 32-25. They finished second in the SAC regular season (12-6) and were runners up in the SAC Tournament. When asked about the team's season so far, sophomore Chris Turco replied

"We started out a little slow in our first few conference games, but after our sweep of Newberry [during the weekend of March 19], we should gain some momentum and add a bunch of more wins to our 20-11 record." Give n the way that the Blue Hose have been performing lately, this season promises to be just as exciting and successful as 1999.

With only one loss, women's tennis team looks to win SAC, bid for NCAA tournament

by Amy Kukla
Sports Writer

The PC women's tennis team has been sweeping through their 2000 season shooting for the top and succeeding so far. After eight matches, the Blue Hose stand strong with only one loss to Davidson College. They are looking to win the SAC and have not lost a match yet in the conference. Under the leadership of their new Coach Bobby McKee, coach of the men's team for the past 16 years, this strong and experienced team forges ahead to face their challenging spring schedule.

"The heart of this season's competition is coming up in the next two weeks. We just hope to continue to play as strong as we have been up to this point and maintain our ranking as #1 in the region," said Coach McKee.

This past weekend, the Lady Blue Hose traveled to Tennessee to face Tusculum College, Saginaw Valley State and Carson Newman College and came back to Clinton, S.C. with three more wins to add to their record. The first day of matches was Saturday, March 18 when the women played back to back matches. In the first match against Tusculum, PC swept the match, winning all six singles and all three doubles for a final score of 9-0. Rachel Key, Clayton McKee, Kelly Fitzpatrick, Sunny

Armstrong, Heather Combs and Allison Merritt all improved their records and won their singles matches. Freshman Rachel Key played a tough match at the number-one spot but ended up winning 7-5, 6-3. Key was named SAC Player of the Week last week after she led the team from the #1 singles flight to victory over Catawba College. Key, from Florence, S.C. has a spring season record of 6-2 in singles and 7-1 in doubles with teammate Kelly Fitzpatrick. The Blue Hose have not lost a regular season SAC match since 1996 and continued this streak this past Saturday with their win over Tusculum. They have now won 33 straight SAC matches.

"We're all looking good so far on the court. This year's season has been great so far. We all get along so well on and off the court," said junior Clayton McKee, team captain.

The second match of the day on Saturday, March 18 was against Saginaw Valley State in Greenville, Tenn. Kelly Fitzpatrick, Sunny Armstrong, Heather Combs and Allison Merritt all defeated their opponents on Saturday. Freshmen Stephanie Mayfield and Bess McGeorge also picked up a doubles win of 9-8, helping the Lady Blue Hose to a final score of 7-2.

On Sunday, March 19 PC traveled to Jefferson City, Tenn. to face Carson-Newman from the SAC. They proved to be no trouble as the Lady Blue Hose swept past them in a 7-2 victory. It was a good day for the doubles teams, as #1 spot Armstrong and McKee won 8-4, Fitzpatrick and Key teamed up to beat their opponents 8-2, and the team of Combs and Merritt finished off Carson-Newman 8-2.

"It was a good weekend for our team. We all gave one hundred percent and won all of our matches. I think that we all work so well together and I'm excited about the rest of the season," said junior Heather Combs.

Last year, the women's tennis team won the SAC tournament, finished the season ranked #1 in the East Region and went to the NCAA Division II National Tournament for the fifth straight year. This year, the team's goals are just as high.

"This season, we again want to win the SAC tournament and qualify for nationals. This year, I'd like for us to go further into the (NCAA) tournament," said Coach McKee.

On Tuesday, March 21, the women faced Lander University at home. As of press time, no stats were available.

Men's tennis team beats Newberry, Gardner-Webb

Despite their disappointing 2-7 record, the PC men's tennis team won an impressive 9-0 victory over Newberry College last Tuesday afternoon, Mar. 14 in Newberry. The Indians were down two players and had to default two matches before play even began.

In singles, senior Donny Thoresen defeated Newberry's Evan Mondan in the first match up, 6-2, 6-1. Ryan Case defeated Bryce Nations 6-1, 6-0, while Shane Whatley defeated Drew Jones 6-2, 6-2, and Sam Small defeated Alex Avila 6-1, 6-1. PC's senior and team captain Jeremy "Crazy" Carl completed the carnage with a 6-1, 6-2 win over Mike Brown.

In doubles, Case and Thoresen teamed up to beat Mondan and Jones 8-4, while Carl and Frye defeated Avila and Brown 8-2.

With the win, the Blue Hose move to 2-7 on the season, while the Indians fall to 4-6.

But the Hose didn't fare as well the day before, dropping its seventh match of the season to NCAA Division I Elon College, 8-1, on PC's Callaway Courts.

Thoresen clinched a singles victory over Remy Nagel 7-5, 6-3, but the other five singles matchups went to Elon. Char Navawongse of Elon defeated Case 6-3, 6-4; Richard Dutton defeated Small 6-0, 6-1; Adriano Blacutt defeated Whatley 6-3, 6-1; Jake Birk defeated Carl 5-7, 6-1 (8-6); Peter Van Graaffland defeated PC's Wally Frye 7-5, 7-5.

The Hose did not fare any better in doubles, with Case and Thoresen losing to Navawongse and Nagel 8-2; Small and Whatley losing to Dutton and Blacutt 8-5; and Carl and Frye losing to Steven Lewig and Nick Behuty 8-2.

On Monday, the Blue Hose defeated Gardner-Webb 5-4 with 1 doubles win and 4 singles wins. As of press time, no other stats were available.

"I think the season is going well considering how young the team is and how many players we lost last year," said Carl. "I very one is stepping up."

Jenkins wins SGA presidency for 2000-2001

by Jack Carmody
Staff Writer

Last Tuesday's elections saw some familiar faces, as well as some new blood, become members of SGA. While three of the five major positions in question had candidates running unopposed, the races for SGA and SUB president were highly contested.

Tanisha Jenkins will take the reins from Jay Philpott as the newly elected SGA president. Jenkins won out over last year's vice president Sara Hopper.

Jenkins has several goals for the approaching school year. First on her agenda is the student body. She wants to look for more ways to get the student body involved in the daily goings on of the student government than are currently available. She also wants to see students actually attending some SGA meetings. Another issue of concern for Jenkins is student parking. Jenkins realizes that many of the dorm parking lots are insufficient for the growing numbers of students. She will also be spending much of her summer here at PC working on next year's goals, as well as helping to organize Freshman Orientation.

Overall, Jenkins likes the way next year's SGA is shaping up.

"I think we are definitely headed in a good direction," said Jenkins. "We need to continue to make improvements that will help the student body continue to love and serve PC."

Liz Woods won the vice-presidency uncontested. She also has several ideas for next year. Woods, like many students, would like to find ways of improving the quality of food served in GDIH. Woods wants to see improvements in PC's campus network. Eventually, she wants the campus email to be web-based—that is, students would be able to check their e-mail from any internet connection, not just those provided by PC.

Woods will also spend a lot of time overseeing the newly reorganized budget. She, like Jenkins, wants to see more students involved with the SGA.

Passing the baton: Outgoing SGA president Jay Philpott chats with SGA president-elect Tanisha Jenkins.

"I want students to feel comfortable talking to SGA directly, and sharing any ideas they may have," Woods said.

Rising sophomore Mitchell Spearman won the position of secretary. First on Spearman's agenda is to keep the students aware of the issues SGA is dealing with. He wants to come up with a way to keep the students informed on a monthly basis on the campus issues and concerns SGA is dealing with. For Spearman, one of those issues is campus lighting. Spearman says that the lighting, especially around the fountain, is insufficient and potentially dangerous. Spearman has already talked with Dr. Griffith and Dr. Gillespie about the problem, and expects to see results in the next couple of months.

Zeta Lamberon won the office of Student Union Board (SUB) President. Student involvement in SUB is important to Lamberon. She says that while this year's SUB had many members, only a portion of them were actually making decisions. She wants to see a more diverse group of people take leadership positions. Lamberon plans to improve internal organization in SUB. She would like to have bigger events, as well as bigger bands come to PC.

"I want to encourage everyone to try to become involved with SUB," Lamberon. "I am really excited about next year."

TJ Ackerly was unopposed in her run for treasurer. As treasurer, she will also be the head of the SGA Finance Committee. The committee was created when SGA reorganized the budget. This reorganization will give SGA more control over where money is spent. Clubs and organizations will now have to submit an application requesting funds to the committee.

"I think if we budget the money correctly, we can have enough left for bigger events on campus," commented Ackerly. All of SGA, including class officers, will be going on a weekend retreat to discuss plans for next year. Class elections were held in Springs Campus Center on Tuesday. As of press time, no results were available.

Imagine leaving tomorrow morning to drive 10-11 hours to be in the nation's capital, attending a Presbyterian church doing a sermon on a cause the following Sunday, and then seeing a myriad of people of differing races and nationalities joining together in the streets beside fellow PC students for the same cause which they find just and believe in.

"As a result of what students have seen and learned in the Honduras course, we decided that participation in the Jubilee rally would be an appropriate step to answer the most pressing question asked each year by students after the trip: 'What can I do?'" said PC Chaplain Greg Henley. "In some of the churches and neighborhoods we visited in Honduras, we saw signs and billboards announcing Jubilee 2000. Certainly the people in Honduras are aware of the connection between their country's debt and the growing mass of poverty that results. When I got back to my office and discovered a brochure for Jubilee 2000 in my mail, I took it to class. We looked at it together and said—'Let's do it.'"

Success of Spring Fling concert, future "wet" events, depends upon maturity of students

This year's Spring Fling has already proven to be innovative with last night's cancer walk relay, the first event of its kind in the nation for college students.

Spring Fling 2000 is significant this year for another reason—it marks the first College-sponsored student activity in many years in which beer will be sold to students aged 21 or older. We at the "Blue Stocking" applaud the College's administration for permitting the College to hold an event in which students may consume alcohol with maturity and moderation. With horrific stories of alcohol-abuse at MIT, LSU and other universities making national headlines over the past few years, it is necessary that Presbyterian College consider innovative ways to combat alcohol abuse. While completely "dry" events should, theoretically, be just as fun and entertaining as "wet" ones, such events, unfortunately, too often do not attract as large a student turnout as they should. Events like Spring Fling, where alcohol is served but strictly regulated, may very well be the solution.

Of course, the success of the event (and the possibility of alcohol being served at future SUB events) is largely dependent upon the students themselves. The College administration has trusted students to behave like adults at tonight's Jupiter Coyote concert. It is now the students' responsibility to prove the administration right.

We at the "Blue Stocking" applaud the members of the Student Union Board for their hard work in planning this weekend's activities, and we urge all students to conduct themselves in a mature, moderate and safe manner.

Letters to the Editor

'Take down the signs. I will not lock my door.'

What does it say about our honor code that we should lock our doors? One of the best aspects of Presbyterian College is the trust between students. I can leave my bike on campus and know it will be there when I return. I don't have to roll up my car windows. Whenever I leave my room, I don't worry about who is going to be in it. If someone wants to borrow a shirt or c.d., they go in and get it. Perhaps I'm being naive, but I trust my friends to bring back my stuff and I trust people I don't know to not enter my room unless someone is in it.

College is not like the real world. PC is not like the real world. Everyone knows this and then points out the negative sides to it. Well, here's a positive thing about the "bubble" that is being ruined by posters and warnings. The student body can go about their daily activities without wondering if someone is creeping into their room. I don't want that part of the bubble to burst. Let the real world handle problems of mistrust and deceit, but my time at school will be one of friendship and unity.

Also, what is a prospective student thinking when he sees these signs? "$15,000 stolen!" When a great attraction to the school is trust and honor, those signs make it laughable.

Take down the signs. I will not lock my door.

Campus Outreach meets spiritual needs of students

The recent article concerning the spiritual needs of the Presbyterian College community has caused some unrest among various students on campus. We completely agree with and are encouraged by Dr. Henley's attempt to "look at ways to better fulfill the spiritual needs of our students." We would like to take this opportunity to encourage Dr. Henley and other members of the PC community with ways that many of our spiritual needs have been met since we have been at Presbyterian.

Campus Outreach Weekly (COW) has played a large role in the growth of our personal relationships with God. Through the Tuesday night meetings, prayer, discipleship groups and Summer Beach Project, we have been challenged to explore who God is and what He desires for our lives. The Gospel is clearly presented at each weekly meeting. We, representing three denominations, have never felt the doctrine of one denomination proclaimed above any other. The central message of the talks presented is clearly centered on the good news that Jesus died in order that we could be in a right relationship with God.

Another reason that we have been blessed by the ministry of Campus Outreach is the fellowship that we experience each week. The atmosphere of the weekly meetings is inviting and inclusive. The entertaining skits and energetic music create excitement in the students who attend. New faces appear each week, and all are welcome regardless of where they are in their walks with God. The friendships built at COW span beyond the weekly meetings, and fellowship extends into our various weekly activities.

We think that Dan Hart has a valid point when he states that it is our "duty as Christians" to humbly seek the truth with other believers—even those who may disagree with [us]. PC offers numerous religious opportunities, and we realize that each group fulfills a specific need. It is a joy to be able to serve alongside each other as we worship the same God.

The recent PC newspaper about Campus Outreach, which included comments from the College Chaplain, was surprising if not disturbing. Is the Chaplain referring to my daughter and her friends when he uses terms such as "narrow vision" and "self-centered"? If so, it is obvious that he knows nothing about them. The fact that he holds this opinion reveals his own narrowness of mind as well as his limited spiritual depth. However, the frightening issue is that he shows such little discretion in waging an open campaign against these students and the way they choose to express their faith in Jesus Christ. In fact, he seems to harbor some personal resentment towards COW.

I am not a PCA member. And like Dan Hart, the newspaper editor, I don't always agree with the approach or with the decisions of Campus Outreach. At times, they are legalistic and over-zealous, as virtually all serious Christians tend to be. Also, I don't see any Scriptural precedent for the staff to "raise support" in lieu of earning support. Beyond that, these young people are open, giving, caring, loving, genuine and sacrificial. Whatever spiritual fruit you can imagine they display with as much consistency as anyone I know. If they err corporately, it is one the side of fervor, which is far better than erring on the side of apathy and carnality. Moreover, their knowledge and understanding of Scripture—as well as human nature—gives their staff a pretty solid basis for leadership. Who gives a hoot about seminary training if there is no vitality, no wisdom, no joy and no discipline?

I would suggest that the Chaplain pray for and support these students. That would be a biblical course of action. In fact, an apology would not be a bad idea.

By the way, congratulations on a very good student newspaper. Thank you.

Slater's short stories feature themes of love, music

by Jill Walker
Special to the "Blue Stocking"

The Baby Can Sing and Other Stories
by Judith Slater
Saravade Books, 200 Pages
Hardcover $21.95, Softcover $13.95

Judith Slater's short story collection, "The Baby Can Sing and Other Stories" is laced with rich description and dream-like imagery that brightens the stories of her everyday characters.

The title story, "The Baby Can Sing," is whimsical, imaginative, and pushes the boundaries of reality. Slater presents to us a newborn baby, with the talent and passion of a gifted young musician—a baby with "perfect pitch" who is "pure rhythm." In this piece, words are portrayed as merely background, not necessary for the beauty of the music. Slater's use of images of the ocean enchants the readers and puts them under her spell. Like the Infant, Slater's work is musical, and the reader is drawn into the music of the story, forgetting that he or she is reading words in a book.

The next story, "The Bride's Lover," is a drastic change in theme and style. Slater tells us the story of an ex-boyfriend, Matt, who is the photographer for his ex-girlfriend's wedding with another man. Slater uses lists of pictures that Matt would and would not take at the wedding, showing us the scenes as Matt would view them and clung us into his inner thoughts about his current situation. Longing for relationships and love is a prevalent undertone carrying much of Slater's work. In this story she again uses the ocean imagery, which proves to be a magnetic touch.

Slater is mesmerizing when she speaks of love and relationships. "The Glass House" is realistic and magical at the same time, portraying a love affair as something so beautiful that we often forget the sin involved, until the characters' flaws and obsessions return to shatter our picture of them.

Slater can definitely write a realistic, magical love story, but she can write a magical story in the more traditional sense. Similar in charm to "The Baby Can Sing" is the story "Soft Money." Here we have a character who has unconventional taste and does not like the idea of having a new one "approved" by her boss's office. We are clued into her previous character before the story even starts by her one thought: "I would never get a car tape player because the radio surprises you." Now, however, she has become consumed with work and with not doing anything that would get her fired. She takes a brush and paints her office doorknob gold—a small gesture that liberates her soul and later the entire atmosphere of the office building. Then we know she is no longer afraid of her boss or of getting fired, she says, "Won't the manager be surprised when he comes in on Monday morning and sees what profound changes the soft money has made in all our lives?"

Music, art forms and dancing are all key elements of Slater's work. In addition to the dancing baby in the first story, Slater follows with another piece including dancing: "Pretty Night." In "Pretty Night," a father is chaperoning his daughter at a middle school dance. The point-of-view is limited through his eyes, giving the readers a parent's perspective of his child's coming of age. His view of the dance is much more dismal and realistic than the expected "joy of youth" clichés. The father is removed and far away from his daughter until the end of the story when they view the "ordinary starry night in the own quiet neighborhood."

Judith Slater's short story collection is superb. It is as radiant as the new bride Amy, as colorful as one of Molly Chu's paintings and as unique as the office with the gold doorknob. Her writing is captivating and as effectively relevant as it is mystifying. It is as necessary to listen to "The Baby Can Sing and Other Stories" as it is to reread Judith Slater's masterpiece.

Shapiro's "Bad Jews" explores faith, family of Jewish culture

Bad Jews and Other Stories by Gerald Shapiro
Zoland Books, 341 pages, $24

The collection of short stories, "Bad Jews," by Gerald Shapiro is a very well-written and extremely funny compilation.

The stories in the book were originally printed in such magazines as "The Missouri Review," "The Southern Review," and "Witness," among others. The stories share some common threads, like characters and setting in a few cases, but each has a unique plot and theme. Every story has a Jewish theme that ties the book together nicely.

Every main character in the book is Jewish and interacts in some way with his or her religion, whether it is by winning a Jewish art prize in the short story "The Twelve Plagues," burying a loved one in "Bad Jews" and "Suskind, the Impresario," or just mentioning their Jewish faith in "The Tutor" and others.

The stories are very well-written and hilarious. In one scene in "Bad Jews," a young man finds out that his elderly father died after he could not make it to the bathroom in time.

Gerald Shapiro, author of "Bad Jews and Other Stories" will appear at PC on Apr. 17 with his wife Judy Slater

He slipped on his mess on the floor and hit his head. It is not something that is normally a laughing matter, but Shapiro delivers these anecdotes with a tasteful sense of laugh-out-loud humor. Shapiro also has very dynamic characters and unique, interesting plots. There are characters like the crazy starving artist, the young history tutor who is used by a girl that from vacation to bury a father that he did not like. His father was a bad person, a bad father and a bad Jew. As a Jew, the son is just as bad. Right from the start, he complains because he has to come back to bury his father. He complains that he has to pay two thousand dollars for a funeral that was already supposed to be paid in full by his dead father. He really does not care he loves, and the down-on-his-luck gadget salesman.

Two of the best stories in the book were "The Tutor" and "Bad Jews." "Bad Jews" is a great ending piece to the book itself. The story is about a young man who has to come back about Jewish traditions for burial. Like the main character of "Bad Jews," almost all of the other characters in the short stories are "bad" Jews, as well. They make fun of their religion, don't follow the teachings of the Hebrew Bible, can't remember the language and don't attend synagogue, but they are good people, nevertheless. Shapiro's Jews are an analogy for other people's religions. Even though the characters are not devout, they are good people.

Another great story in the book is "The Tutor." It is about a college sophomore from the wrong side of the tracks in Kansas City who is home for the summer and is tutoring a beautiful rich girl who is taking a history course in summer school. For payment of his services, she dates him for the whole summer. After she receives a good grade in history and pays him with one last date to a professional baseball game, she drops him forever and breaks his heart. She does not want to date the tutor after her class ends because he is poor and from the wrong side of the tracks.

Gerald Shapiro and his wife Judith Slater will be at Presbyterian College on Monday, Apr. 17 to read some of their work. The reading will be at 7:30 p.m. in Inklings and will be a CFP lecture event. Copies of both books are available at the campus bookstore and will be on sale at the reading.

Arnold Symposium explores 'Genetics and the Media'

by Doodle Harris

"In 1968 when I first got a job as a media writer, if we had to write a story concerning genetics, we had to spell out DNA and explain what it was," said Joann Rodgers, deputy director of public affairs and director of media relations for the Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions in Baltimore, Md. "Now, [journalists are] perfectly comfortable with the jargon of genetics. Words that weren't invented last year are in the headlines this year."

Rodgers spoke Thursday, March 30 at 11 a.m. to open the fourteenth annual Arnold Symposium. This year's symposium topic was "Genetics and the Media." The symposium spanned two days, Thursday and Friday, March 29 and 30 and was held in conjunction with the South Carolina Junior Academy of Science. In addition to such noted journalists as Rick Weiss of the "Washington Post" and such geneticists as Dr. Peggy Penick-Vance of Duke University, PC also welcomed some of the brightest scientific minds in high schools, middle schools and elementary schools throughout the state of South Carolina.

"I think that advances in genetics and medical uses of it will have great impact on students in the next fifty years," said Dr. Richard Baker, associate professor of philosophy and chair of the Steering Committee for the Russell Program for the Study of Media. "The media's treatment of genetics, however — whether it be in news and features reporting or popular entertainment — too often results in public misunderstanding. In our Symposium, we want to explore how a story on genetics 'comes together' and how it is then received by the public. We want to get both sides, the media side and the science side."

The Annual Arnold Symposium is planned and conducted by the Russell Committee for the study of Media. The annual symposia and other media related programs on campus are made possible by a generous gift from Ernest and Francis Arnold of Atlanta, Ga. The Arnolds were on campus for the convocations last Thursday and Friday. Following the final convocation, they expressed extreme pleasure with the organization and relevance of the two-day event.

The program opened with a Thursday morning convocation in Edmunds Hall. Rodgers spoke to a full house about the relationship between journalists and scientists. She emphasized how intellectual challenges of science were often intertwined with the financial interest of corporations and how journalists were often more interested in what the public wants to hear rather than what the public needs to hear.

"Whereas the press is extremely sophisticated, the press is not in the education business. It is in the news and coverage business — sometimes in the entertainment business," said Rodgers. "Genetics is a science story, but it is also a medical story, a public policy story, a legal story, a business story and a scandal story. Genetics is a story for courts and Wall Street as well as journalists."

The events continued on Thursday evening with a panel discussion entitled "Genetic Discoveries, the Media and Public Anxiety," also held in Edmunds Hall. Participating in the discussion were Jerry Bishop, full time medicine reporter for "The Wall Street Journal"; Alta Charo, Professor of Law and Medical Ethics at the University of Wisconsin; Rick Weiss, former licensed medical technologist and current medicine reporter for the "Washington Post"; Jodi Klein Rucquot, Director of Genetic Counseling Services at Greenwich Hospital in Greenwich.

Baker opened the evening with a hypothetical newspaper story about Calvin, a calf cloned from an adult cow, calling the event "scientifically the most celebrated and dreaded discovery of all time." Baker then turned to the panel for reactions.

"The article tells the reader what to think and how to react before you even tell them what happened. You have no choice but to be outraged," said Weiss.

"What struck me was a lack of skepticism," said Bishop.

Rodgers proposed one solution to the situation.

"Triangulate information," she suggested. "Go to enough experts to get differences on the table and then disclose your story. Look at different stories and see where they match."

When Baker further prompted the panel about the possibilities and repercussions of cloning, they were eager to discuss the impossibility of exact cloning.

"The age of cells is shorter in cloned animals," said Tarleton. "Lifespan of a cell is related to an enzymatic process. Cloning is a reproductive thing, not a genetic thing."

"You really can't expect to have an exact replica of someone with environmental affects on genes. It depends on cultures and lifestyle of genes," said Penick-Vance.

Bishop countered, citing the need to beat the competitors and sell newspapers, emphasizing that the truth is not what readers wanted to read.

"One of the biggest problems in writing a story is to get people to read it," he said. "We say 'a gene,' not 'one of fifty thousand that may be involved.'" the financial side of genetics.

"Science doesn't dictate the price of stock," said Bishop. "It's the people on Wall Street trying to guess what other people are doing. The phenomenon on Wall Street has very little to do with science."

"Every major university has a corporate sponsor," said Penick-Vance. "There's not enough money in academia alone to solve these problems. Drug companies make drugs; universities don't make drugs."

Baker then asked for final comments. "Be skeptical of everything," said Rodgers. "I expect everyone in this room to be excited about science and how molecular and nature systems work," said Tarleton. "There's a real wonder, wanting to know the beauty of science."

"Talk to your parents and find out about your genetic history," suggested Rucquot. "You will be facing reproduction in one way or the other sooner or later."

Baker, in typical Baker fashion, had the final word.

"There is a need for thoughtful, careful examination," he said. "It seems to be what I hear you saying is 'it will be difficult but not impossible to navigate.'"

The final convocation featured Charo who emphasized the need to find the story behind the story when it comes to cloning.

She challenged the media "to tell the interesting story — whether to buy and sell ourselves — not the trivial one of selling models on the internet."

She continued by stating that the single most under-reported aspect of the story of Dolly, the cloned sheep, story was how she got her name. The cell from which Dolly was cloned was from the mammary gland of an adult sheep. She was named after Dolly Parton.

She also emphasized the need to consider natural reproduction instead of relying on cloning and genetics for our future.

"What is missed is the self-limiting nature of the phenomenon," she said. "For most of us, reproduction depends on close and intimate contact with someone we care about very deeply. The person people state they would most like to clone is Mother Theresa. Genes don't code for giving up your money and moving to India."

Charo also mentioned that she was the only person to ever receive a Congressional sponsored tour of California sperm banks.

Following Charo's speech was an awards ceremony. The final award presented was the highest award presented by the State of South Carolina by the Governor's office. It was presented to Don Johnson, past president of the South Carolina junior academy of science.

"I was hoping students just gained a better perspective of what happens when science discovers become public," said Steward Sanford, a PC alumnus who helped organize the event.

"The important lesson was to be critical."

Possessions you couldn't part with include a flask and a brilliant cooler? Favorite color chartreuse? Ever been interviewed by Oliver North on MSNBC? First degree black belt in karate? Katie Dobbins completes all of these questions.

Katie Dobbins, a senior from Simpsonville, S.C. is a history major with a biology minor. She is active in Alpha Delta Pi, SGA, RHA (president), handball, yearbook (Greek editor), and intramurals. She is also a biology lab assistant. She is an avid sports fan as well as a chef.

"Katie is one of the hardest working assistants I have ever had," said Michael Rischbieter, chairman of the biology department. "Lab would be a much more difficult course for me to teach if it weren't for Katie's dedication and hard work. I am forever thankful that she is my assistant."

The quotes that Dobbins lives by are "never under estimate the power of stupid people in large groups" and "if you sit on the sidelines of life, you're never able to make the big play."

"Katie is a caring friend who has a rich love for everyone on campus," said seniors Catherine Rawl and Morgan Morse. "You can always count on Katie to be there for you."

Dobbins said that her most embarrassing moment was when she was "caught walking

Porkchop: everywhere from the president's house to the dining hall

by Ben Thomas
Staff Writer

It thoroughly investigated, one would doubtless find that, upon mention of the phrase "pork chop," many students at Presbyterian College immediately reflect on such great dishes as Pork Chop Exotica or Pork Chop O'Brien. However, a greater part of the students think about Presbyterian's own carpenter/maintenance man Pork Chop.

Pork Chop is an employee here at Presbyterian who does carpentry, repairs just about everything, rides in a truck with another employee named "Big Bo" and models for art portraits (wearing suspenders, mind you). However, when we met to talk in the Information Booth, I found that he is an individual both gifted and funny and with whom talking is a true pleasure.

The interview was certainly grueling — principles were questioned, worldviews were critiqued and many women swooned. The questions were straight to the point and painfully personal.

"What do you think about communists?" "Well... once, I was accused of being a communist because I had a beard."

As it turns out, when Pork Chop was working for his aunt, he decided to grow his beard out. His aunt, quite opposed to the beard, told him that the only people who had beards like his were "hippies and communists" and told him to shave it. Continuing on the tangent of beards, Pork Chop revealed his grand scheme for a "chin rattle." People would bid on how many chin he has, then, he would shave his beard and a winner would be declared. As the objective reporter, I immediately stopped writing and laughed really, really hard.

As you probably can tell, the interview was very entertaining, citing his Irish heritage, Pork Chop expounded about the origins of the Information Booth, his time at Laurens High School, how he actually knew where Piedmont (S.C.) is, ghost stories, bluegrass, cloning and a great deal more.

As most would imagine, I was aching to find out what the real name behind Pork Chop is. Within the first minutes, I was graciously allowed access to such coveted knowledge. He told me how his neighbors had given him his present moniker, and then spoke about how we "are all neighbors, really." Thoughts such as this showed the wisdom with which Pork Chop spoke, so I soon asked him about some concerns of mine.

"Any ideas about girls?"

"Find one in church."

Porkchop

"Would you ever wear a fez to work?"

"Probably not. I'd probably wear a sombrero if it would cover me."

After a great deal more laughing on my part and some comments about fatback, we addressed the more serious topics of bats living in Doyle and how PC students used to go to the maintenance dump because it was a "romantic place." Pork Chop also related some of the ba-sies about his job.

"We go wherever the wheels need greasin'." Although his favorite thing to do is build something, Pork Chop spends a great deal of his time repairing destruction from vandalism, replacing windows and doors and whittling small boats. Pork Chop takes a great deal of pride in his work (DO NOT question his carpentry skills), but finds a great deal of pleasure in his work as well. Working everywhere from the President's house to the dining hall to students' rooms, he says that he gets to meet a lot of people. Furthermore, he says, he likes to think of himself as Santa Claus, because his access to areas all over campus gives him a good take on "who's naughty and who's nice." (At this point, the author acknowledges that, like the reader, he had never heard this comparison made before.)

Working at what he calls a "good school, [with a] good reputation," Pork Chop expresses a great deal of happiness at where God has put him. So, if you happen to see Pork Chop anywhere on campus, fixing a door, collecting large mats of pollen for chicken nests or apprehending PC couples at the maintenance dump, be sure to ask him how he's doing, and he might answer you in the style of former maintenance man Johnny Vance.

Although Weiss accused the scientific world of "lying to his face," the scientists did not wholly blame the newspapers for public misinformation. The scientists instead cited science fiction movies, manipulative television shows, and a lack of education.

"The schools do a terrible job of preparing themselves for this," said Charo. "In our physics class, we teach our students that balls roll down inclines on frictionless surfaces. Then we expect them not to be confused in the real world. Of course we end up with simplistic genetic views. One pedagogical technique is to start with the simple and move to more complex. Only the simple is too unrealistic."

The subject of the bill before Congress attempting to ban cloning in every form also arose.

"There are legislators out there who care about this stuff and make decisions based on their understanding which are not always particularly deep understandings," said Weiss.

"I don't believe Congress backed away from the legislation because they understood the complications of this research," said Charo. "I think what happened is far more political. They aren't going to waste their political chips on this bill. No one wants to clone themselves except for a couple of looney tunes."

"What is missed is the self-limiting nature of the phenomenon," she said. "For most of its reproduction depends on close and intimate contact with someone we care about very deeply."

The person people state they would most like to clone is Mother Theresa. Genes do not code for giving up your money and moving to India.

Charo also mentioned that she was the only person to ever receive a Congressional sponsored tour of California sperm bank.

Following Charo's speech was an awards ceremony. The final award presented was the highest award presented by the State of South Carolina by the Governor's office. It was presented to Don Johnson, past president of the South Carolina junior academy of science.

"I was hoping students just gained a better perspective of what happens when science discoveries become public," said Steward Sanford, a PC alumnus who helped organize the event.

"The important lesson was to be critical."

Possessions you couldn't part with include a flask and a bullfrog cooler? Favorite color chartreuse? Ever been interviewed by Oliver North on MSNBC? First degree black belt in karate? Katie Dobbins completes all of these questions.

Katie Dobbins, a senior from Simpsonville, S.C. is a history major with a biology minor. She is active in Alpha Delta Pi, SGIA, RHA (president), handball, yearbook (Greek editor), and intramurals. She is also a biology lab assistant. She is an avid sports fan as well as a chef.

"Katie is one of the hardest working assistants I have ever had," said Michael Rischbieter, chairman of the biology department. "Lab would be a much more difficult course for me to teach if it weren't for Katie's dedication and hard work. I am forever thankful that she is my assistant."

The quotes that Dobbins lives by are "never under estimate the power of stupid people in large groups" and "if you sit on the sidelines of life, you're never able to make the big play."

"Katie is a caring friend who has a rich love for everyone on campus," said seniors Catherine Rawland Morgan Morse. "You can always count on Katie to be there for you."

Dobbins said that her most embarrassing moment was when she was "caught walking

Porkchop: everywhere from the president's house to the dining hall

by Ben Thomas
Staff Writer

If thoroughly investigated, one would doubtless find that, upon mention of the phrase "pork chop" many students at Presbyterian College immediately reflect on such great dishes as Pork Chop Esotica or Pork Chop O'Brien. However, a greater part of the students think about Presbyterian's own carpenter/maintenance man Pork Chop.

Pork Chop is an employee here at Presbyterian who does carpentry, repairs just about everything, rides in a truck with another employee named "Big Bo" and models for art portraits (wearing suspenders, mind you). However, when we met to talk in the Information Booth, I found that he is an individual both gifted and funny, and with whom talking is a true pleasure.

The interview was certainly grueling—principles were questioned, worldviews were critiqued and many women swooned. The questions were straight to the point and painfully personal.

"What do you think about communists?"

"Well... once, I was accused of being a communist because I had a beard."

As it turns out, when Pork Chop was working for his aunt, he decided to grow his beard out. His aunt, quite opposed to the beard, told him that the only people who had beards like his were "hippies and communists" and told him to shave it. Continuing on the tangent of beards, Pork Chop revealed his grand scheme for a "chin raffle." People would bid on how many chins he has, then, he would shave his beard and a winner would be declared. As the objective reporter, I immediately stopped writing and laughed really, really, really hard.

As you probably can tell, the interview was very entertaining, citing his Irish heritage, Pork Chop expounded about the origins of the Information Booth, his time at Laurens High School, how he actually knew where Piedmont (S.C.) is, ghost stories, bluegrass, cloning and a great deal more.

As most would imagine, I was aching to find out what the real name behind Pork Chop is. Within the first minutes, I was graciously allowed access to such coveted knowledge. He told me how his neighbors had given him his present moniker, and then spoke about how we "are all neighbors, really." Thoughts such as this showed the wisdom with which Pork Chop spoke, so I soon asked him about some concerns of mine:

"Any ideas about girls?"

"Find one in church."

Porkchop

"Would you ever wear a fez to work?"

"Probably not. I'd probably wear a sombrero if it would cover me."

After a great deal more laughing on my part and some comments about fatback, we addressed the more serious topics of bats living in Doyle and how PC students used to go to the maintenance dump because it was a "romantic place." Pork Chop also related some of the ba-sies about his job.

"We go wherever the wheels need greasing!"

Although his favorite thing to do is build something, Pork Chop spends a great deal of his time repairing destruction from vandalism, replacing windows and doors and whittling small boats. Pork Chop takes a great deal of pride in his work (DO NOT question his carpentry skills), but finds a great deal of pleasure in his work, as well. Working everywhere from the President's house to the dining hall to students' rooms, he says that he gets to meet a lot of people. Furthermore, he says, he likes to think of himself as Santa Claus, because his access to areas all over campus gives him a good take on "who's naughty and who's nice." (At this point, the author acknowledges that, like the reader, he had never heard this comparison made before.)

Working at what he calls a "good school, [with a] good reputation," Pork Chop expresses a great deal of happiness at where God has put him. So, if you happen to see Pork Chop anywhere on campus, fixing a door, collecting large mats of pollen for chicken nests or apprehending PC couples at the maintenance dump, be sure to ask him how he's doing, and he might answer you in the style of former maintenance man Johnny Vance.

"Same old gravy...just warmed over."

Jubilee

tween Fourth and Seventh Streets in Washington, D.C. The rally occurs a week before the World Bank Executive Board and the International Monetary Fund have their spring meeting.

The goals, as listed in their website, are to influence national and international policy makers and to call on the U.S. public to pressure Congress and the Presidential administration to cancel the international debt of impoverished countries.

According to the Jubilee website these debts were accumulated over decades from a combination of economic bad luck, bad policies and corruption. The website argues that lenders share responsibility because they continued to make new loans or to rollover bad ones to maintain the pretense that all was well when it was not. Creditors continued to press impoverished countries to pay in full even when it became clear that their debts could never be paid or could be paid only by imposing enormous human suffering.

The Jubilee promotional brochure argues that cancellation of debt is the moral and just thing to do because international debt condemns hundreds of millions of people to live in poverty; debt undermines dignity and self determination; debt diverts resources from basic needs such as education, nutrition, health, clean water and sanitation, directly affecting children; debt leads to destruction of the environment and creates political, social and economic instability throughout the world.

The brochure also states that debt has not yet been cancelled. Although President Bill Clinton last September promised 100 percent cancellation of debts owed to the US by such hindered countries and a plan was initiated to cancel other debts, cancellation cannot proceed unless Congress approves and provides funding. At most, 36 countries will benefit. But opponents of the debt argues that many more need such assistance and that it must be ensured that conditions for debt cancellation really help and do not hurt people and the environment.

"Jubilee is a biblical idea rooted in Leviticus 25," said Henley. "Every seventh year was a Sabbath year, a time to rest the land. After seven cycles of seven years, the fiftieth year was designated as Jubilee—a time when not only was the land to lie fallow, but debts were forgiven, prisoners set free and land redistributed. The law was intended to serve as a safety net for anyone in Israelite society who might, in the preceding 49 years for whatever reason, have incurred unpayable debt or permanent bondage to another Jew. Jubilee was legislation that provided a fresh start for people who had fallen through the cracks. It was an act of grace and forgiveness. Jesus refers to Jubilee in Luke 4:19 as 'the year of the Lord's favor.' And so churches have decided that with the advent of the new millennium, this year would be designated a year of Jubilee. Most Third World countries have no possibility of ever repaying the debt owed. After going to Honduras, a phrase in the Lord's prayer has taken on new meaning—'forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.'"

Students participating in the march argue

"...we'll learn at the rally that we are not alone, or helpless, or hopeless in the struggle for justice for the poor. It is empowering to join hands and wills with other people concerned about enslaving poverty in a world of abundance" that international debt is a moral issue.

--Dr. Greg Henley, Chaplain

"The amount the third world currently owes to the first world is over $1.5 trillion," said sophomore Katy Tarter. "Although governments have developed plans for long-term payments and have created alternative methods of financing through the IMF and World Bank, there is no way impoverished nations will be able to repay that amount anytime in the next several hundred years."

"Also, in order to receive financing from these international banks, many countries are forced to adopt policies that are designed to open their economies to the world market, but often result in a reduction in government spending on social and health services and a sharp decrease in the value of their currency (causing inflation)," Tarter added. "The fact is that many third world governments give repaying their debt to our country priority over securing the basic needs of life for the people. The accumulation of wealth at the expense of other human beings is just plain unethical, not to mention fundamentally un-Christian. We need to realize that a free market is not necessarily a just market."

But some economists argue that cancellation of debts may not necessarily help Third World nations.

Dr. Jody Liptford, associate professor of economics, noted that the issue is complicated by the fact that loans to Third World nations were made with taxpayer money. With taxpayers in the equation, he said, the issue "becomes a political football."

"I'm not sure also that the forgiveness of debts will make any significant difference in the long-run welfare of these countries," said Liptford. "You've got to have secure property rights, law and order; you definitely have to have those two in order for a country to be prosperous. They must have economic freedom to be prosperous."

But PC students participating in the march argue that cancellation of debts is an important first step in promoting such economic independence.

"I am not so naive as to think that canceling the debts of the countries in these areas will change their social system or make their living situations that much better, but I do feel like the goals that Jubilee 2000 are trying to attain are steps in the right situation," said senior Natalie Osborne. "To truly become democratic and sustainable countries, these areas need to totally reorganize their societies and governments. This is not something that Jubilee alone can do, but if these debts are removed, the governments of these countries cannot ignore or blame their poverty and third world status on other people. They will be pressured then to make better decisions—decisions which benefit the whole society and not just the upper echelon of society."

Henley said that he feels this trip will be a great experience for any PC student interested in attending this event.

"I think the trip holds tremendous benefits for PC students. It will make them more aware of and responsible for the world in which we live," said Henley. "Anyone who claims to be a follower of Jesus cannot ignore the desperate plight of the poor. This trip should also raise some questions for our students, and asking questions is a first step in becoming globally aware. Most importantly, I think, we'll learn at the rally that we are not alone, or helpless, or hopeless in the struggle for justice for the poor. It is empowering to join hands and wills with other people concerned about enslaving poverty in a world of abundance."

Tarter agreed that the trip is extremely important.

"Even if we are not able to persuade Congress to pass legislation, we will have at least raised a voice," said Tarter. "The call for Christians is not to fight only the winning battles, but to fight the just battles. This issue goes beyond religion, though. It's sociological, political, ethical, economical, ecological. If we are able to do nothing more than to bring awareness to the fact that these things are inherently interconnected, we will have made progress."

Tarter said that the march will be a victory even if the legislation does not pass.

"Several friends have asked me, 'What's the point?' And that's a valid question," said Tarter. "Many of the multinational corporations that have a hand in creating the current situation do have very strong political ties. I honestly don't know if the bill will pass. And what if it does? It would not be a solution to world poverty, by any means. It is, however, a step—a very necessary step—in the right direction. The world is watching us. If we truly want to create a successful global economy—one that fosters peace, justice and a real, not forced, desire from all parties for cooperation—we have shown the world that our intentions are not completely self-serving."

PC softball team beats Francis Marion, splits doubleheader with Gardner-Webb

The Presbyterian College softball team traveled to Gaffney, S.C. over the weekend, defeating Francis Marion 4-3 and losing to host institution Limestone College 6-2 in the Limestone College Softball Round Robin Tournament.

In the first game, the Lady Blue Hose battled back from a 2-0 deficit in the fourth to score two runs, while scoring one run in both the fifth and sixth innings to clinch a 4-2 victory over Francis Marion. Senior shortstop Jamie Carter went 3-for-4 in game one to lead the Blue Hose.

In game two, Limestone jumped ahead to a 3-0 lead in the first inning and never looked back, outhitting the Blue Hose 14-4 on the day. Limestone added one run in the second and two in the third to secure their lead. The Blue Hose managed two runs in the sixth to close the lead to four but could not overcome the deficit losing 6-2. Sophomore Beth Pearson from Athens, Ga. went 2-for-3 in game two including a homerun in the loss. Pearson pitched two complete games to increase her complete game total to 26, and she now has a 13-20 record on the season. The Blue Hose are now 14-27-1 (4-3-3 SAC) on the season.

The Lady Blue Hose also split a game apiece with Gardner-Webb in a doubleheader a couple of weeks ago. Gardner-Webb University's Caley Parker scattered seven hits and three runs over seven innings and Beverly Proffitt went 2-for-3 at the plate with three RBIs to lift the Bulldogs to a 6-3 second-game victory over Presbyterian College and earn them a split in the teams' South Atlantic Conference doubleheader.

In the first game, the Lady Blue Hose stroked 14 hits en route to a 7-2 win. In the second game, Proffitt staked the Bulldogs to a 2-0 margin in the opening frame when she turned a 1-0 pitch and deposited it well over the center field fence. Gardner-Webb extended that margin to 5-0 with three more in the second inning. After Parker singled, Leigh Ann Elmore walked and both took another sack on a passed ball. Emily McCurry singled, but Parker couldn't score until Allyson Broxton stepped up and laid down a bunt single. Dani Risinger's groundout brought home Elmore, and Proffitt's single plated McCurry for the 5-0 margin.

The Blue Hose trimmed the advantage to four in the top of the third on Sonya McNeil's double followed by Jana Waters' RBI single. The Bulldogs got that tally back in the bottom of the sixth when Elmore led off with a single, advanced to second on a fielder's choice and raced home on McCurry's double—her third hit of the game.

In its final stanza, Presbyterian scratched out two runs on two hits and four errors to account for the 6-3 score. Jamie Carter ignited the rally with a leadoff double and took third on the first Gardner-Webb error. Amanda Williamson brought her home with a single, and she moved to second on another miscue. Williamson scored when the Bulldogs had a problem fielding Angie Mullins' grounder, but only Parker's ERA suffered and not the final tally as the right hander struck out two of the last three batters to close out the victory.

Parker improved to 12-9 with the win, while Lady Blue Hose starter Beth Pearson fell to 12-19.

In the opener, Pearson was just about unhittable, yielding only two runs on seven hits in a complete-game effort. Meanwhile, the Presbyterian bats did all the damage they needed to in the first inning, rocking Gardner-Webb starter and losing pitcher Natalie Decker for three runs on four hits.

Speedy McNeil gathered the first hit of the day with a bunt single and quickly moved into scoring position by stealing second. Water's double to left center brought home McNeil, and after she swiped third, Jennifer Henderson made the count 2-0 with another two-bagger down the left field line. Henderson advanced to third on a fielder's choice and raked home one batter later when Beth Rocker laced a single into left field.

The Lady Blue Hose added some insurance in the next frame, pushing across three more runs on three hits and a Bulldog error. The key blasts in the inning were McNeil's two-RBI double and Henderson's RBI single to left field.

After Presbyterian capped its scoring with one more in the fifth, Gardner-Webb managed to grind out solo runs in the two closing innings to account for the final margin. In the sixth, Decker's triple to right placed Melissa Barrett, who had singled; and in the seventh, a groundout by Broxton was enough to get across Elmore, who had tripled three batters earlier.

Decker suffered the loss and fell to 0-5 on the year. Proffitt completed the day 3-for-6 while Elmore was even better at 3-for-5. Waters, who was 5-of-7 with two RBIs, and McNeil, who finished 4-of-8, powered the Lady Blue Hose.

Women's tennis ranked #1 in East, men improve record

by Jamie Lightcap
Sports Writer

The Blue Hose continued their domination of the South Atlantic Conference and in the process have improved their record to 11-1 (5-0 SAC). The team is now ranked #1 in the East Region, and they hold a #22 national ranking. Depth seems to be the reason for the constant success of the ladies. The doubles seems to always give the team a big boost as the Blue Hose did not lose a doubles match in the last three matches.

The Blue Hose hosted the Lander Lady Senators on Mar. 21 and crushed them 9-1. Kelly Fitzpatrick, Allison Merritt and Heather Combs all posted quick two set victories. A tougher test came on Mar. 25 from Millersville University which came in ranked #3 in the region. However, the Blue Hose handled them easily, winning 7-2. Led by freshman Rachel Key's easy two set victory, the Blue Hose showed they deserve the #1 ranking in the region. On March 30, Wingate University came to Clinton and tried to break a 33-match winning streak for Presbyterian in the conference. The Blue Hose prevailed easily, though, 8-1. Both Clayton McGee and Heather Combs won 6-0, 6-0. Sunny Armstrong also won easily, 6-2, 6-1.

The Men's Tennis team has shown much fight lately. After beginning the conference season 3-0, the Blue Hose have evened their mark at 3-3. The men have an overall record of 3-11. However, the team is in great shape in the conference and looks forward to a late season push.

On March 22, the Wingate Bulldogs edged the Blue Hose 5-4. Doumy Thorsen, Ryan Case, Jeremy Carl and Wally Frye all posted impressive straight set victories. Against Millersville University and Carson-Newman College, the men did not fare as well, losing 6-3 in both matches. Finally, a trip to Mars Hill did not treat the Blue Hose well, as they fell again 7-2. Jeremy Carl rolled to a 6-0, 6-0 victory, while both Sam Small and Shane Whitley put up valiant fights, losing 6-3, 3-6, 6-4 and 6-3, 3-6 (7-5), respectively.

PC, Newberry to host Spring Sports Festival for 2001-2003

The South Atlantic Conference announced that PC and Newberry College will host the Spring Sports Festival from 2001-03. The announcement came at a press conference held Thurs. day afternoon Mar. 30 at the Presbyterian College softball complex. The Festival brings together over 700 student-athletes from all SAC institutions to participate in four days of action in baseball, softball, men's and women's tennis and men's and women's golf. This spring will be the sixth year of the Festival since its inception and has been hosted by Catawba College in Salisbury, N.C., since its beginning.

"Rowan County and Catawba College have done a tremendous job in setting the tone for what the South Atlantic Conference and its supporters expect in SAC championships," said SAC Commissioner Doug Echols. "The Festival has been such a great success due to the hard work and support of many fine volunteers. The conference, along with its member institutions, owe Salisbury and Catawba College a great deal of gratitude for getting the Festival off and running."

The new agreement will keep the Festival with the Clinton/Newberry partnership for three years. This Festival will provide the local area with exciting sports competition and will also provide a significant economic boost to both communities.

"The conference is looking forward to these two communities coming together to support the Festival that has been such a grand tradition to all member institutions for the past six years," said Echols. "We are excited about what the Partnership has offered the conference and the interest both communities have expressed in the Festival."

During the four-day event, athletic venues will be held on the campuses of Newberry College in Newberry, S.C., and Presbyterian College in Clinton, S.C. The golf championships will be held at the Country Club of Newberry and at Lakeside Country Club in Laurens, the home course for Presbyterian College's golf team.

Spring Fling 2000

The Student Union Board has worked very hard with making this year's Spring Fling a success. This year we are trying something new! We have contracted with Sodexho to sell cold beer during the Jupiter Coyote concert on April 7 from 7 until 10 p.m. Therefore, we have to change a few of our rules from previous years. No outside containers will be allowed to be brought in the venue. People desiring to purchase beer will be issued armbands upon entrance to the venue. During the Jupiter Coyote concert other beverages and food will be sold. No person will be allowed to exit and re-enter the venue from 7 until 10 p.m. Portable restrooms will be available for your use. Maple Street will be blocked off during the concert and Scots Blue Line will be running for your convenience. We are encouraging everyone to walk to the concert. Remember, this is the first time beer has been sold at an event on campus in quite a while, so please help us make this a great and safe event!

We are also excited about the variety of events that are on our calendar for the weekend. All events are free to the PC community. For more information call the SUB office at 8411 or the Office of Student Activities at 8484.

Baseball team beats Tusculum, O'Hara breaks career hits record

PC's senior catcher Brad Teal from Lawrenceville, Ga. went three-for-five with four RBI's and a homerun to lead the Blue Hose to a 13-3 win over the Pioneers of Tusculum College Sunday afternoon April 2 at the PC baseball complex. The win gave Presbyterian a three-game sweep of the Pioneers over the weekend and improved their record to 11-8 in the South Atlantic Conference regular season.

The Pioneers drew the first lead on the scoreboard with a pair of runs in the top of the second inning on a two-RBI single by senior catcher Ryan Priest. PC came right back in the bottom of the inning cutting the lead to 2-1 on a RBI-scoring fielder's choice by senior shortstop Jamie Carter from Chapin, S.C.

Tusculum pushed the lead to 3-1 in the top of the third, but from there the Blue Hose took over. PC scored three runs in the bottom of the inning on Teal's homerun and followed with one run in the fifth and two in the sixth to take a 7-3 lead entering the seventh inning. Presbyterian then took a commanding 13-3 lead after scoring six runs in the bottom of the seventh.

PC's senior first baseman Bucky O'Hara from Fountain Inn, S.C. added a double in the third to break the PC baseball program's all-time hit record. O'Hara, who went two-for-three with two doubles on the day, now has 260 career hits eclipsing the old mark of 258 held by former Blue Hose standout Roger Foltynowicz (1996-99).

PC's junior starting pitcher Michael Burns from Simpsonville, S.C. was in command from the start, going seven innings, allowing three runs on seven hits while striking out eight batters. Burns improves his record to 6-1 on the season. Sophomore Ryan Senningen from Myrtle Beach, S.C. and freshman Charles Asyelle from Cayce, S.C. combined for two shut-out innings of relief work. They did not allow a single hit and walked only one batter.

PC was led at the plate by freshman leftfielder Brian Pahl from Peachtree City, Ga. who went a perfect three-for-three, scoring one run, while senior designated hitter Brian Riche from Irmo, S.C. went three-for-four with two runs scored. Carter finished the day two-for-five with two RBI's and a triple as the Blue Hose pounded out 16 hits.

The Pioneers' starting pitcher sophomore Lee Moorefield took the loss to drop to 1-3 on the season after going four and one-third innings allowing five earned runs on eight hits and struck out two batters. At the plate Tusculum was led by Priest who went two-for-three with two RBI's. Presbyterian improves to 27-15 overall and 11-8 in the SAC while the Pioneers fall to 11-23 overall and 3-15 in the league.

PRICELESS

by Joseph E. Jackson IV, Jr.
Staff Writer

Late last night, the national calendar service announced a miscalculation. Apparently, after precisely measuring to an eighth of a nano-second how long it takes for the earth to orbit the sun, a PC internet hacker discovered the mistake.

The year 2000 is, in fact, not supposed to be a leap year. Following the 1996 leap year, the world should not experience another until the year 2007. The national calendar service apologized previously to the mistake.

"I noticed that after the scientists divided the year by four, multiplied by six, stood on their heads, subtracted seven, twined their noses and divided by thirteen, they forgot the all important last step: multiplying by the remainder of the number of happy meals bought in the past year divided by the age of the pope," said senior math major David Hassene.

Head scientist and PC alum, An drew Folks, was fired for attending to a blind date while on the job.

"Mr. Folks failed to write his paper detailing the history of the integral sign while in my class," said math professor Dr. Goetzel. "I knew he was trouble all along."

Rowdy city residents disturb quiet students

by Thomas Hobson
Wayward Traveler

A group of 50 angry PC students held a rally outside the office of Clinton mayor Myra Nichols last week to protest the city's failure to clamp down on senior-citizen partying. Chanting, "Hell, no, we won't go," the protestors, who call themselves the Clinton Homerenters Association, vowed that they would not leave the premises of the Clinton city hall until city officials promised to restore order.

In particular, students complained about residents on Calvert Ave. and Owens St., where many PC students also reside in off-campus housing. According to students, local residents have repeatedly violated the city's ordinances pertaining to noise by performing yard work and hosting raucous parties at all hours of the afternoon, when most college students are asleep.

"I just can't get any sleep at all," complained senior Ashley Owens. "The other day my next door neighbor was cutting the grass right outside my window at 12:00 noon on Saturday. Who wakes up before 12:00 noon on a Saturday, let alone cuts their grass? Any right thinking person would still be sound asleep in bed."

Other students have complained about rowdy parties hosted by local residents.

"It's not that I have anything against Clinton," said SGA president Jay Philpott, who resides on Calvert Ave. "I love Clinton—the brewing of beer from heavy water and genetically-altered grain," said Reese. "I'm sure research will win me the Nobel Prize if I can ever get it done, but I've been rudely interrupted time and again by my neighbors, who insist on playing Perry Como CDs at full volume. With the bass kicking, I can't concentrate at all. It's like living next door to a honky-tonk."

Reese: "It's like living next door to a honky tonk."

it's just the people I don't like. I understand that retired people need to party just as much as anyone else, but they don't need to do it at such ungodly hours. The other night my neighbors had a huge party in which over three people were hanging out until well after 9:30. When's a guy supposed to get any rest?"

Philpott's roommate William Reese expressed the same concerns.

"Last night I was in the middle of a very important chemistry experiment that involves

"Gilette, the Best a Dean Can Get"

Presbyterian College Dean of Students Joseph O. "Touchdown Joe" Nixon appears in a new commercial for the Gilette no-mess shaving cream pump. Nixon, who receives over $2.3 billion yearly in promotions from Gilette, Nike, McDonald's, Starbucks, Sodexo-Marriott, and Leggs, stars in the multi-million-dollar commercial, which will be aired next year during Superbowl XXXIII. The Presbyterian College Pep Band and Lee Davis will star in the half-time show.

POINT

With increasing number of incoming freshman, every possible building on campus should be used for housing.

Each year, our beloved alma mater accepts more and more freshman to the campus. More and more students, in effect, choose PC as their institute of higher education. However, such increased enrollment has its problems. Even after building the Carol International House, the college struggles with where to house next year's rookies.

What about the president's house? We here at the "Blue Stocking" recommend placing the excess freshmen in the spare rooms of the president's mansion for several advantageous reasons:

1. Currently, the president has complained about cleaning up following the many receptions in his house. Apparently he still finds plastic punch cups in his sofa cushions months after the fact. With freshmen nearby, Dr. Griffith could simply ask them to clean up in return for extra bonus bucks in Springs.
2. In shaping the future leaders of America and the world, PC has a responsibility to ensure that its graduates not only look nice on paper, but also look nice in person. Since Dr. Griffith was recently awarded "Best-dressed college president in South Carolina," he could offer the freshmen fashion tips as well as loan them items from his immaculate wardrobe.
3. Mrs. Griffith could lock these freshmen's doors, saving the Residence Life Office some time and man-power.
4. In an effort to foster increased interaction between the students and the faculty/staff, what could be more direct contact than actually sharing living facilities?
5. The College can save the money that it would have used to build a new dorm or renovate an existing one and, instead, use the money to build a full-sized bowling alley on the West Plaza.

Although, the "Blue Stocking" has found several more advantages to the new living arrangements, we could only list a few here. For more information, please pick up our pamphlet in Springs just under Governor George W. Bush's midwifery pamphlets.

President's Column--Jay Philpott

SGA President thanks students for support of administration's graft, corruption

The Student Government, as always, is working for you. We are going to continue to fight for you. As many of you know, the school store has undergone a leadership change. With Follet in charge now, we are going to make sure you get what you want. You can't find what you want in the school store still? Don't worry--SGA is going to make sure that pornography and tobacco products will be offered before the end of the year. You asked for it and we are going to make it happen for you. PC, too liberal? No way! Our new Strategic Plan guarantees pornography and tobacco products. PC is going to serve its customers--the students.

SGA and other student groups on campus will again have more office space next year. By 2002, we will be in complete control of Admin. and all its offices and departments will begin working out of the residence halls. Let's see how comfortable those administrators are in the residence halls! In addition, next year's SGA President will live in the President's home. Someone got confused when it was built, it wasn't for the College try club dues. An enormous savings to PC and increasing the SGFC funds substantially! Thought Dave Matthews would never play on campus? You were wrong, they will be here next spring!

It has been my greatest joy to serve and lead this year. Some of you asked me if it was a challenge to lead a student body described easily with one word--apathy. My response: no way! With students who are not participating in offered programs, the SGFC will have a huge budget surplus next year. You want a tuition and fee cut? Did you not notice that SGA has government in the title? No cuts for you! SGFC will be paying me the entire surplus next year for consulting fees. These consulting fees will allow me to run for Mayor of Clinton--an office to which I will bring something new. What is new to that office? You know the answer. As Mayor of Clinton I will catch up Clinton and answer to the students. My plans: ban educational dormitories in the city limits so that all of you can live off campus. We'll turn those city ordinances against those who were so vocal against us. Last summer, I thought they saw one hundred year old couches and honky tonks before. They ain't seen nothing yet! Be real, fellows, radicals and liberals. You ask, what are radicals and liberals in Clinton, S.C.? Anyone who has knowledge of what has happened in the world since 1940. See you on the flip side!

As midnight approaches, SGA President Jay Philpott changes into his alter-ego, the Incredible Hulk.

We are going to dissolve an expensive office on campus, take their program and salary funds and just pay their coun-knowledge of what has happened in the world since 1940. See you on the flip side!

Cliff McKinney: songwriter, athlete, friend, shuffle board champion and just a nice guy

by Cliff McKinney
Friend to most of the Editors

His full name is Clifton Russell McKinney which means "Foxy hill-dwelling Irish son of Cliff." His friends simply call him Foxy. His enemies call him... ah, but of course he has none.

"I don't mean to brag, but I think that if everyone knew what I have done in my lifetime, voting for the Most Outstanding Senior Award would be a no-brainer," said McKinney.

McKinney then continued to list some of his greatest accomplishments.

In 1006, his drunken grandfather set an arrow in the air and changed history. Continuing in his grandfather's footsteps toward greatness, McKinney collaborated with Bee Gees in the 1970s on a number of songs including "Staying Alive."

Although the eighties are a "forgotten time" according to McKinney, he again taped into his musical genius in 1992. That year, following a deep depression, he wrote a little tune called "Ice Ice Baby" to amuse his friends. The song later became a minor hit.

In 1996, Cliff invented Viagra. He claims the idea just came to him one day. In 1997, due to the success of his drug, McKinney was able to afford to enroll in Presbyterian College.

"Next to my photo documentary on the poetry I wish he'd leave me alone."

"He's a nice guy," said Jono Sullivan, senior.

"His genius is hard to notice," said Senior William Reese. "I wish I were as smart as he."

"He looks like the oldest Hansen brother," added Dr. Lynne Simpson. "I only wish his papers were as cute as he is."

McKinney says his biggest regret is majoring in English.

"What I really wanted to study was turf management," said McKinney. "Since PC doesn't offer that as a major, English was the closest thing I could find."

After graduation, McKinney already has a job working as an assistant golf professional at the largest country club in Joanna, S.C.--the Joanna National.

Improved appearances, improved learning
Dean of Faculty issues new dress code policy for faculty members

by Drew Caspar
Fashion Reporter

Last week the office of the Dean of the Faculty issued a statement concerning the dress code and general appearance of professors at Presbyterian College. The statement calling for an end to blue jeans, among other garments, was prompted by the recent Board of Visitors' arrival on campus. During their final meeting with administration they described "unsightly appearances not conducive to appropriate learning environments."

David Gillespie, dean of the faculty and vice president for academic affairs, immediately took action based on the Board of Visitors' concerns.

"Although the Dean has more important things to do with his time, the Dean knew this would be of concern sooner or later," he said.

The first article of the new policy states: Professors will no longer be allowed to sport any item of clothing, the 'casual nature' such as blue jeans, tennis shoes, or tee shirts."

Things are as they are because they were as they were.

Dr. Jim Skinner, Professor of English

"I can't say I'm too terribly happy about the ultimatum," said Chris Grant, instructor of political science. "The school won't pay me enough to afford to buy a motorized vehicle. A suit just isn't comfortable for riding my bike."

But while faculty members voiced their opposition to the new dress code, students argued that professors should be held to a higher standard of professional appearance.

"It's frustrating to be dressed nicer than the profs," complained senior Rod Hammond.

Dr. Peter Hobbie commented that as long as he can continue to wear brown tweed coats and khaki pants, the new policy is "no problem whatsoever."

Letter to the Editor

Jacob's Hall: Military-Industrial complex?

It is incumbent upon me to warn the student body of PC about a lurking evil that, until recently, has been hidden behind a mask of respectability. The dangers of this evil are numerous and far reaching. President Eisenhower warned us of this hulking, powerful, secret network that is the Military-Industrial Complex. One would think that at PC in Clinton, S.C. the campus would be safe from these unelected, self-appointed, almost-omnipotent, behind-the-scenes policy makers and advocates of social control, but it is not so. As we celebrate the 33rd and 32nd (respectively) anniversaries of President Johnson's decision not to seek a second term and the end of a military operation (JUNCTION CITY) of questionable legality "near" the Cambodian border, I ask you all to consider the curious bed fellows that occupy Jacobs Hall. Is it a coincidence that both the business department and the ROTC are the only occupants of this building? I think not. Until recently, both departments have been maintaining a low profile, waiting for the right time to emerge, infiltrate and destroy the enclave of "communist hippies" that have been congregating in Inklings. Our undercover reporter, Inez Turner, secretly taped ROTC cadet Robert Kurts suggesting to his superior officers, "Why don't we just bomb the sons of bitches?" His question was received with great gusto and much enthusiasm from the rest of the Highlander Battalion. Furthermore, through much investigative reporting, we at the "Blue Stocking" have uncovered a devious plot by this twin colossus of gold and guns: once the collectivist hippies are eliminated through a campaign of limited warfare, Inklings will be converted into an olive loaf factory. That's right, not only will we have no place to hang out, smoke, and listen to loud music, but GDH will be forced to serve us this olive loaf under the monicker "Defense Bologna." (This time the GDH food specialists will not get to choose an exotic-sounding name.) We desperately urge students to prepare themselves for a difficult series of demonstrations and protests. Even though we have great concern that our new building, precariously located behind Jacobs Hall, has been wire-tapped and bugged, and that this article could mark the end of our budding journalistic careers and lives, we are issuing a call for student mobilization against this impending atrocity. We are even willing to adopt a strategy of prolonged guerrilla insurgency until we have overcome this well-organized, well-financed, well-equipped, but directionally-challenged monolith.

In closing, I would like to leave everyone with the now-famous words of SGA President Jay Philpott: "Ask not what Inklings can do for you, but what you can do for Inklings." Until next time.

Ingram named 1999-2000 Professor of Year

by Tara Sluder
Campus Life Editor

At the annual Honors Convocation held last Tuesday, Apr. 11, an excited and grateful Dr. Booker T. Ingram stepped on stage to receive the highly esteemed Professor of the Year Award. Each year a faculty member who has excelled in leadership, service, creativity and scholarship is selected to represent PC as its professor of the year. Ingram, this year's recipient, will speak at Commencement and be nominated for both the S.C. Governor's Professor of the Year and the Council for Advancement and Support of Education U.S. Professor of the Year.

"It was certainly a pleasant surprise for me," said Ingram. "At the moment you find out something like this, it causes you to reflect upon your career, your family and the support your family has given you over the years. You think about the students you've had and the friendships you've developed with faculty and staff. It gives you a reason to be proud, but at the same time it is a very humbling experience. You realize that there are many capable people just as deserving as you of this honor."

Nominations for Professor of the Year are made by Sigma Kappa Alpha Honor Society as well as the different departments. After the nominations have been made, a selection committee composed of faculty, students and an alumnus make the final decision by voting.

As tradition has it, the President of the college takes the member of the faculty selected as Professor of the Year out to lunch to inform the professor of the honor. Up until the luncheon, the selection is kept a secret. Ingram was delighted to receive the good news from Dr. Griffith.

Ingram is one of the four members of the political science department, a department that is rapidly growing and already represents the second most popular major at PC. After attending undergraduate school at Winston-Salem State University, Ingram went on to do graduate work at Ohio State University, where he specialized in political theory and public policy.

Before coming to PC in Aug. of 1987, Ingram taught at Dillard College, a private liberal arts college in New Orleans, La. His response to an ad in the "Chronicle of Higher Education" in Nov. of 1986 landed him a position at PC, where he became the third member of the political science department. Dr. Tom Weaver, chair of the political science department, was on the board that selected Ingram.

"Booker was a wonderful addition to our department and has contributed a great deal to its success," said Weaver.

According to both students and colleagues, Ingram's relationship with his students exemplifies the model student/professor relationship that one hopes to get at a small liberal arts college. He reaches out to his students, who in turn recognize his dedication to his work and his genuine concern for his students.

"The students I have had throughout the years have been very inspirational," said Ingram. "I like the small class size here at PC because it allows you to develop a good relationship with your students."

"His teaching style is so enthusiastic; you can't help but be interested in what he says," said junior Jennifer Miller. "Out of the classroom he's always interested in our lives, and he does so much to motivate us."

Among Ingram's goals for the near future are to write a book on African-American political views and to spend his sabbatical studying abroad for a year in either East Africa or Indonesia as a Fulbright Scholar. Having already developed courses in political theory, Ingram anticipates developing a new 200-level course in political ideologies, as well.

Although his current position is far from his childhood dream to play third base for the San Francisco Giants, Ingram serves a vital role in the PC community, developing young minds and providing an inspirational role model for students of all disciplines.

"Dr. Ingram is one of the more inspiring teachers I've had at PC," said senior Bob Ehrhardt. "I've loved all of my professors here, but he just sticks out in my mind. He listens to your ideas, gives you feedback and shows you respect. He's really opened my eyes to a lot of different things."

POINT

"Blue Stocking" wants to hear from students

This issue "The Blue Stocking" has done something a little different. Instead of having just features on events that have already passed, this issue features two stories that try to look deep into issues that most people do not know much about. In the story on scholarships and the story on organizational funding, we are not trying to create controversy; rather, we are reporting on topics that we feel the student body, as a whole, should be aware of.

However, this approach raises another important issue, namely, whether the "Blue Stocking" is reporting campus news or creating campus news. The solution to this issue depends, in part, upon you, the students. The "Blue Stocking" is, after all, a student newspaper, and we try to report on things that interest you. So tell us what you think. Has the newspaper overstepped its bounds by calling into question issues that no one (besides us) is talking about? Would you like to see more features of an investigative nature? You can contact us by phone (ext. 8448), by e-mail at bluestock@admin.presby.edu or by regular mail at box 51061. You can also check us out on the web at web.presby.edu/pcnp/bluestocking. Send us your comments in a letter to the editor and you could get published in a future issue.

By responding to these questions and telling us what you think, you participate in public discourse and you help us do our job better than we do it now.

The "Blue Stocking" cannot be a student newspaper without the students.

I suppose it's inevitable that I would eventually have to say goodbye. All good things, as the saying goes, come to an end, and after four good years, my time as a PC student is finally about to come to an end.

With Commencement looming before me, I have lately given a lot of thought to my PC experience. Why, I have thought, do graduating seniors always seem nostalgic about PC during the weeks immediately prior to their graduation? Why do alumni of PC so often light up when they recall their undergraduate years? What is it about this place that makes leaving it such a bittersweet experience? Two weeks ago during PC's first Commencement I had the privilege of witnessing an event that has helped me to better answer that question: only hours after a member of the men's soccer team tragically lost his mother to cancer, the others members of the team, with tears in their eyes and arms around each other's shoulders, walked silently around the track in memory of those who have died of cancer.

The unity and love that characterized these men as they walked around that track is a poignant reminder of what makes this place special. Certainly PC has a solid academic program, a very successful athletic program, and an excellent reputation as a national liberal arts college; yet it seems to me that none of these qualities identify PC as unique.

After all, as good as our academic program is, we're not Oxford. As exciting as our football team is, we're not Notre Dame. As impressive as our rankings are, we're not Harvard. I suggest that PC is special for some other, less-tangible quality, one that cannot be easily measured by positions in rankings, amounts of research grants, or numbers of national championship rings.

As far as I know, PC's motto "While we live we serve" is unique among colleges and universities. Certainly many institutions have a similar religious foundation as PCs, but it is indeed rare for an institution of higher learning to be so explicit about its commitment to service. I think that Presbyterian College's motto says something special about this place—it implies that this College's main mission is not to create wealthy people, or ambitious people, or even "intelligent" people so much as it is to create giving people—people who will give their lives in service to God and to their neighbors. When I process across the West Plaza during commencement, then, it will not be the classes or the extracurricular events or even the social events that I will remember the most, but the sense of love and unity that comes from serving together with others in this community.

While we live, we serve. While we serve, we live.

My Turn
Dan Hart

It all started with Y2J; now it is time for SGA. Your Student Government Association is here for you. Class elections have been completed, and new leaders are stepping forward everyday, but before all the "old" leaders depart, we must say thank you for a job well done. As the Student Government Association gets ready to begin a new year, we must tell the "old" SGA thank you and we will miss you all. We appreciate all that you have done and you all have set a great example for us this year.

We would like to thank all of the students who took the time out to run for offices or attend campaign speeches, and those who came to Springs to vote. We are proud to see so many people interested and involved in their campus government.

The newly elected leaders are excited about the upcoming year and are ready to work for you. With the help of this year's SGA improvement committee and newly elected SGA Secretary, Mitchell Spearman, we have already started working on increasing lights for the dark areas around campus. Way to go Mitchell and the Improvement Committee members!

After exams are over and done with, the "new" SGA will travel to Greenwood for a retreat. During the retreat, we will discuss the concerns of the students and act on them by setting goals in order to help resolve the concerns. We will also discuss Orientation 2000 and decide on a theme that will get the incoming freshmen excited about PC.

We are excited about representing and serving the student body and we look forward to working with the students, administration, faculty and staff of Presbyterian College during the next academic year.

Student reflects on Jubilee 2000

by Rachel Parsons
Special to the "Blue Stocking"

Two weekends ago, a group of us from Presbyterian College went to Washington D.C. for the Jubilee 2000 march. Dr. Greg Henley, chaplain, Dr. Charles McKelvey, professor of Sociology and students Katy Tarter, Jon Hickman, Shelaine Bird, Elizabeth Michael, Will Shelburne, Keirsty Duncan, Neely Stansell, David Simpson, Kelly Wessellink and myself went to Washington Jubilee 2000 demands that our government cancels the debts that the Third World countries owe the United States government. President Bill Clinton supports some forms of debt cancellation, but Congress still needs to approve the cancellation.

The debts of Third World nations originated in the 1970's when banks had an excess of money because of an excess of petroleum dollars. To put that money to use, the banks offered loans to Third World nations on the basis of an economic theory. This economic theory promised that the loan would cause development which obviously has not happened. International finance agencies use these debts to force Third World countries to adopt neo-liberal economic policies that hurt the country. These debts are crushing and in fact, unpayable. The cancellation of these debts would impact the budget of the United States very little, but it would allow third world nations to expand necessary programs like healthcare, education and development.

A sign atop a stage demands the cancellation of Third World debts at the Jubilee 2000 rally in Washington, D.C. two weeks ago.

The twelve of us from PC left Alexandria, where we stayed Saturday night and took the train into Washington on Sunday morning. We walked to New York Avenue Presbyterian Church. There we met many other people who were going to the march, including Sara Simpson, a PC alumnus. We worshiped with New York Ave. and had the good fortune of hearing Rev. Dr. Marian McClure preach a sermon called "The Whole Gospel for the Whole World." Dr. McClure is the director of the World Wide Ministries Divisions of the Presbyterian Church (USA). She brought up the necessity of keeping evangelism and social justice together, not separating them as we often do. After church we walked to the Mall below the capitol building, there we heard several inspiring speakers and two singers. Then we surrounded the reflecting pool in a human chain. It was so inspiring to be surrounded by so many passionate, caring people. After the human chain dispersed, we began our journey home to PC.

Debt forgiveness is a major issue for people of faith. The debt is killing people in third world nations today and will continue to do so until the debt is canceled. Several speakers at the rally on Saturday brought up biblical passages to support debt forgiveness, including Matthew 5:7, "Blessed are the merciful, for they will receive mercy," Matthew 6:12 and 14:15, "And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors. For if you forgive others their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if you do not forgive others, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses," Luke 17:4, "And if the same person sins against you seven times a day, and turns back to you seven times and says, 'I repent,' you must forgive," and Colossians 3:13, "just as the Lord has forgiven you, so you must also forgive." (New Revised Standard Version)

Most people in third world nations suffer from debts that they did not have a role in obtaining. Everyone needs forgiveness. Nations like the US have caused much human suffering in developing countries. It seems obvious to me what we, as Christians are called to do.

According to Grant Vosburgh, PC's senior director of public relations, PC's "Relay for Life" has now raised $5,800 to continue the search for a cure to cancer the last $400 coming in the week after the April 6.

What makes the number and the event so significant is that PC's "Relay for Life" was the first ever student led Relay event.

Vosburgh praised the efforts of every student involved, especially sophomore Meg Mulkey, who spearheaded the event.

The proceeds from PC's "Relay" will go towards the Laurens County "Relay," which will take place at PC's Intramural fields June 2-3.

SGA to obtain salaries for executive council

by Ben Acton, Managing Editor and
Amy Cooper, Staff Writer

This past Monday, Apr. 17, the Student Government Association voted on a proposal that would allow the members of the SGA executive council and the chair of the Judicial council to receive a salary for their work.

Although results were unavailable at press time, SGA president Tanisha Jenkins indicated that the proposal would be approved.

The proposal came from an SGA ad-hoc committee established this spring to study and recommend changes in the by-laws and constitution and to investigate the possibilities of obtaining salaries for the SGA president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and the Judicial Council chair.

"[The ad-hoc committee] thought that salaries were in need because of the amount of work done by the executive council, especially the president," said Jenkins.

The salaries would be paid in the same manner of a work study with where payments would be broken up into monthly periods throughout the year. Although exact figures were not available, Jenkins and SGA treasurer T.J. Ackery indicated that the figure would be around $2,000. Ackery also said that the additional funding for salaries would come from SGA's own budget.

"The money would come from SGA's budget, and we would create a new sub-division of our budget and cut back on some old ones [to provide the extra money]," said Ackery.

This past summer, former SGA president Jar Philpott and dean of student affairs Joe Nixon re-worked the SGA budget to allot $2,000 for salaries. However, in the fall Philpott felt that the money would be better spent if it was used in providing better programming and activities for the students, and the money was returned to the contract services, a sub-division of the SGA budget which provides for student entertainment and bands.

Philpott also indicated that he wanted to find other sources of funding, rather than SGA's own budget.

"We wanted to look into getting Work Study for [funding] executive salaries," said Philpott.

Although Jenkins does not rule out the possibility of funding coming from other sources, she feels that the transition from having unpaid to paid elected student leadership must be made before any final decision can be made about where funding might come from.

"We have not looked at the possibility of Work Study, because we are at a transition," said Jenkins. "The next step is working through the process of where the money should come from."

Jenkins did assert that reassigning monies already in the SGA budget to provide the proposed salaries would not undercut the effectiveness of the SGA's other programs.

"We will not take anything away that's worthwhile to SGA," she said.

Nixon has concerns not about the effect that salaries would have on SGA, but about the overall merit of salaries for elected student leaders.

"I have mixed feelings on the issue," said Nixon. "I feel that editors and interns who are paid are selected for these positions. The members of SGA are elected to serve. It needs to be discussed as what would be appropriate [compensation] as far as SGA [is] concerned."

Currently, paid leadership positions include SVS intern and vice intern, PasaC editors, The Blue Stocking Editors, "Figs and Thistles" editors, Radio PC managers, Celtic Cross interns, Resident Assistants (RAs) and Resident Computer Consultants (RCCs). According to Nixon all of these leadership roles are obtained through an application process.

"There is an application process involved, usually with an interview," said Nixon. "I really don't consider those [positions] a club; they are more of a job."

But Philpott and others counter that being on the SGA executive council makes it difficult to have another job on campus.

"With the amount of work involved, you can't hold another job," said

Philpott.

"Definitely the president and vice president don't have time to do a work study, and the executive council as a whole gives a lot to the school," said Ackery.

The ramifications of the SGA's proposal for other student organizations with unpaid leadership remains to be seen.

Next year the Student Government Finance Committee (SGFC) will be responsible for distributing additional funding to various organizations on campus. The committee will consist of an administrator appointed by President Griffith, a faculty member, the SGA treasurer (Ackery), the SGA president (Jenkins) and the junior class president (Susan Roy). The committee will receive $25 for each full time student. With enrollment nearing 12,000, the total amount of money at the committee's disposal would be close to $30,000. Organizations will be able to apply to the SGFC for use of these additional funds.

When responding to a question about whether or not the SGA or other organizations could apply for funding to be used for salaries, Jenkins said that granting such requests is not the purpose of the SGFC.

"SGFC will be basically used for programming or activities a group would like to have and not for paying the salaries of the executive council or any other organization," she said.

Jay Philpott: Going beyond the opinion page

The man, the myth, the legend: Jay Philpott.

Many students know senior Jay Philpott of Lexington, Ky. as the Student Government Association (SGA) president. However, Philpott's impression on PC goes much deeper than merely politics.

Philpott started to make an impact almost immediately upon his arrival at PC. His first year at PC he was elected freshman class president. But just when Philpott thought he had reached the pinnacle of his inaugural year, he got his first really big break: he was asked to dress as the school mascot for football games. As he has done with so many other things, Philpott took this job to new heights. That year the South Atlantic Conference (SAC) Magazine voted the PC Blue Hose "the most fun and unusual mascot in the SAC."

His sophomore year, Philpott was voted Residence Hall Association President. Also that year he was elected secretary of his fraternity, Theta Chi. His junior year, he made that jump to president of Theta Chi. This year, Philpott is serving as Alumni Affairs Chairperson. Philpott is also a Sterling. And, of course, this year he was SGA president.

"I really learned a lot working with him," said current SGA vice-president Sara Hopper. "He really taught me a lot about responsibility and what it takes to be a good leader. He will definitely be missed."

Philpott is majoring in history, with a business minor. Originally, he said, he was going to major in business but disliked the amount of math involved in a business major and decided to switch to history. Philpott said that he plans to get a job straight out of college. He wants to enter the field of general education administration, with a concentration on fundraising. In preparation, Philpott has been interning at PC with the College advancement staff. In fact, Philpott has just recently acquired a job with Briar College in Lynchburg, Va. His new title is Annual Fundraising Associate. He plans to start work in mid-May.

"There are a lot of really big schools in Virginia and I think this will be a great opportunity for me," said

Philpott.

Contrary to how it may appear, Philpott prefers a slow day. Ideally, he said, would get up about nine in the morning and there would be scrambled eggs and bacon waiting for him. The day would be spent relaxing and watching college basketball, which, Philpott said, is much more exciting than the NBA. The evening would consist of a nice long walk on the beach. At sunset, he would find a nice pier by the bay and watch the sun go down.

Philpott also said that nothing beats going to El Jaisco and hanging out with friends. Among his favorite movies, Philpott lists "Field of Dreams" and "The Shawshank Redemption."

"I really like movies with a good plot," said Philpott.

With the recent SGA elections, Philpott said that he is leaving the student government in good hands.

"I am excited about the SGA, but I am even more excited about next year," said Philpott. "I think we have a good group of people coming in that will definitely work hard for the students."

Last week Philpott was awarded the Outstanding Senior Award for 1999-2000. At commencement, he will give "one more speech."

College says academic scholarships exceed athletic scholarships

by Doodle Harris
Content Editor

In addition to being the time for baseball, picnics and longer days, spring is also the season for high school students across the United States to sign letters of intent to use their athletic abilities for one college or another. PC also looks for the best athletes to represent the College on the field and in the court. Within the past month, PC's webpage has been cluttered with such headlines as "Marsch becomes fifth volleyball signee," "Softball signs three for next year" and "Women's softball signs two recruits."

According to the offices of admissions and the financial aid office, approximately forty-four percent of the incoming freshmen have been awarded academic scholarships whereas only 16.5 percent of current students have athletic scholarships. In addition, nearly half of the current students (549) have at least one loan helping to fund their college careers.

"It's a formula," said Judi Gillespie, director of financial aid. "Once all of the automatic scholarships are awarded, like athletic and academic, we tell [applicants] to get an application for a need based scholarship like the FAFSA (Federal Application for Federal Student Aid). Then we put in a loan [into their financial package] to cover full or part of the remaining need. Then we add PC grants. Finally, we look for work study or other loans to meet the students' need.

"Most schools do it the same way," continued Gillespie. "We all have to abide by federal formulas that are regulated, because we take federal money, we have to go with federal guidelines."

PC offers four academic scholarships to its freshmen. The first is the Quattlebaum Scholarships, which are given yearly to two students with exemplary academic records and participation in school and community activities who undergo numerous interviews at PC. Other scholarships include the John I. Smith Scholarship, which covers two thirds of tuition and is awarded to students with a 3.7 high school GPA and a 1.300 on the SAT; the Belk Scholarship, which is one-half tuition and is awarded with a 3.5 GPA and a 1200 on the SAT; and the Southeastern or the Dillard Elliot Scholarship, which covers one-third tuition and is awarded with a 3.0 GPA and a 1000 SAT score.

"These guidelines are just for this year's incoming freshman," said Dana Paul, vice president of admissions. "They may change next year." Paul also commented on the importance of academic scholarships.

"Academic scholarships attract students with good academic records and people who will persist," he said. "They help us attract high achieving students."

Athletic Scholarships are regulated by the South Atlantic Conference. The SAC limits the number of full tuitions each sport can award. The amount of scholarship money a school may offer is the SAC's limit (currently 70) times the tuition of the school (22,424). In other words, the school can offer up to $156,940 to athletes. Most schools, including PC, allot their money in the form of several partial scholarships instead of fewer full scholarships.

Although PC can offer $156,940, PC currently only gives about $135,000 which is the equivalent of sixty full tuitions. According to Gillespie, PC does not have the funds to award the full seventy scholarships.

In addition, students are also awarded scholarships based on leadership in high school. These include the Ferdinand and William Jacobs Scholarship worth up to $3,000 and the Orr Scholarship worth up to $1,500.

Paul also noted that the admissions staff is developing additional scholarships for minority or multicultural students.

"We are trying to be as egalitarian as we can," said Paul. "We are actively trying to improve diversity on campus. We are working on a few scholarship proposals, but we didn't have the opportunity to award those special scholarships this year because they aren't funded yet."

Currently, PC has two members of each class who have received the Quattlebaum scholarship, which guarantees full tuition. In addition, only one student athlete receives a full ride on athletic money alone. Finally, the two top musical scholarships are awarded by the music department to students with great musical potential; the scholarships cover only the cost of tuition.

Ann Martin: "She keeps the school running"

by Helen Machida
Staff Writer

As the school year comes to an end, the seniors eagerly anticipate the big day: graduation, the day when they proudly wear their caps and gowns while standing amongst some of their closest friends with whom they have lived with, loved with, and cried with during their last four years. Graduation is a breeze compared to their last four years of paper and exams they struggled through thanks to their commencement rehearsal. In their rehearsal they are directed where to walk, where to sit and what to do. The process seems so easy. Graduation does not run smoothly by magic though.

Presbyterian College's Administrative Assistant to the Vice President for Academic Affairs, Ann Martin, helps organize PC's commencement exercise along with a myriad of other honor events and groups on PC's campus.

As Dean Gillespie's right hand woman, Martin works closely with Honors Day, Freshman Honor Scholars, reviewing PC's catalog, setting the academic calendar, PC at Oxford and faculty development just to name a few.

Gillespie "recall[s] the old MASH" television series remembering [ing] Radar O'Reilly, the administrative assistant who always anticipated what the Mash commander would need (and had it ready) before the boss had even thought of it. I often call Ann Martin "Radar."

Martin has not always been Gillespie's "Radar." She first started out in Neville as the faculty secretary. Even though she is no longer stationed in Neville, she continues to work closely with the faculty by "answering questions and responding to their request, tasks that range from academic procedures to budget," reported Dr. Ron Dempsey.

Growing up in Clinton from her childhood has given Martin the opportunity to watch her husband and daughter graduate from PC. When asked what she liked most about PC, she answered that PC is "always growing and [has] things going on."

Martin helps to make "things go on" on this campus. After organizing the PC to Oxford trip for many years, she was asked to join the group last year as they traveled abroad.

"[Martin] was a great sport...and enjoyed being around the students," said fellow travel companion, Dr. Anita Gustafson.

Martin enjoyed England so much that she hopes to have the opportunity to return after she retires from duties to PC in two or three years.

Until then, Martin has her hands full with a few more years of commencement exercises and academic calendars to plan, however Dempsey noted, "[Martin] manages all of these responsibilities in a superb manner."

"I don't think people realize how much she does for each person individually, whether they're students or a member of the community," said Susan Freeman, student assistant in the office of academic affairs. "She keeps the school running."

Men's, women's tennis teams optimistic going into today's SAC tournament

by Jamie Lightcap
Sports Writer

The PC women's tennis team enters the conference tournament on a major roll. With a record of 15-1, a post-season berth looks very likely for the talented Hose. The women have climbed to a national ranking of #22 and hold the top spot in the East Region. A very young team, the Hose boast great depth and a chemistry that keeps them in every match. The consistent play of every player has contributed greatly to the success of the team and bodes well for their prospects both in the conference tournament and the regional tournament. The Lady Blue Hose finish the conference season undefeated and look to sweep through the tournament.

It has been a tough, yet enjoyable season," said freshman Rachel Key. "We as a team are excited about the opportunity in front of us, and are confident that we have a great chance to prevail."

Individual honors abound on the team. Sonny Armstrong was the latest Blue Hose to be named SAC player of the week. With a 3-0 record, Armstrong helped lead the team over quality opponents like Shorter, Kennesaw St. and Newberry. Armstrong is currently ranked #2 East in doubles with Clayton McGee. Other individual accolades are due to Key, who is presently ranked #44 in the country and #2 in the region. McGee is ranked #14 in the region, while Kelly Fitzpatrick is close behind at #17. Two PC doubles teams are ranked in the region, one being the McGee and Armstrong team, and the other being Fitzpatrick and Key at #10.

Much is expected when the team travels to Catawba to compete today and tomorrow. As of press time, the results of yesterday's matches were not available.

A 4-14 record does not tell the whole story of the men's tennis team. While it has been a tough and challenging year for the guys, they have enjoyed some success. Even after a tough loss to Erskine (2-7), the team is still able to hold its head high. The team is currently ranked #15 in the east region, and looks to move forward with a strong showing in the conference tournament. Two players hold individual rankings within the region: Donny Thoresen and Ryan Case are ranked tenth and twenty-fourth, respectively. Together they team to make a doubles team ranked twelfth in the region.

A strong showing in the conference tournament will help to ease some of the pain of losses in close matches this year.

"We look forward to the tournament, and we look forward to the challenge of winning it," said senior and team captain Jeremy Carl.

Surely this attitude is carried over to the rest of the team as they prepare to do battle this week. Again, we look forward to the results of their play in the tournament.

Softball team looks for victory in SAC tournament this weekend

by Amy Kukla
Sports Writer

With a ranking of third in the conference the Lady Blue Hose softball team prepares themselves for the South Atlantic Conference Tournament. The team finished out their season with a record of 7-3-1 in the conference and 17-28-1 overall. Going into the tournament, only Carson-Newman and Lenoir-Rhyne, sharing the ranking for first place in the SAC, stand in the way of PC. With a strong ending to the regular season and outstanding players, the Lady Blue Hose have a fighting chance.

"Our goal all year has been to just keep playing and fighting in every game we play," said sophomore pitcher Beth Pearson. "Now as we get closer to conference, we will continue to give every game our best effort. Our goal is to win the conference tournament."

The team finished out the season winning four of their last five games. In a double header on Apr. 11 against rival Newberry College, the Blue Hose skinned the Indians in both of the games. The softball team took advantage of their homecourt and beat Newberry 7-2 in the first game, and 2-1 in the second. Beth Pearson and junior centerfielder Sonya McNeil helped the team start the rally in a three-run first inning. Pearson racked up two RBIs and McNeil knocking a leadoff double. Newberry tried to recover the ground they lost in the first inning by putting two runs on the scoreboard in the second inning. PC responded by racking up four more runs in the fourth inning. Junior third baseman Ross Stewart contributed an RBI double in the fourth to help secure the 7-2 win. The major players at the plate were Sonya McNeil and freshman first baseman Jana Waters, each going two-for-four. Freshman catcher Beth Rucker rallied offensively and went three-for-four.

The second game proved to be a bigger challenge for the Blue Hose, but they still managed to pull out a win. The game was scoreless until the bottom of the sixth inning when Newberry scored one run, only to be matched by one run by PC. Then, powerhitter Sonya McNeil stepped up to the plate to clutch the win for the Lady Blue Hose. The bases were loaded when McNeil rifled a single up the middle for the RBI run winning the game for the Blue Hose. Pearson finished out her second complete game on the mound with yet another win under her belt, allowing only two earned runs and striking out eleven batters for the day. Pearson was named SAC Pitcher of the Week, with a personal record of 18-24 for the season.

"I was really surprised, but very excited, to be named Pitcher of the Week," said Pearson. "I just think that we've had a great season this year. I think that we've definitely grown closer as a team, and I'm looking forward to my next two years that I have here."

The next hurdle for the team to overcome is the conference tournament on April 18-23 in Salisbury, N.C. With a third place ranking and their usual hard work on the field the Lady Blue Hose should be optimistic about the tournament.

Blue Hose baseball team extends win streak to six with wins over Kennesaw St., Erskine

The Presbyterian College baseball team hung out 15 hits en route to a 12-3 win over the #9-ranked Kennesaw State Owls Tuesday afternoon, Apr. 11, at Stillwell Stadium. The loss snapped a 10-game winning streak for KSU.

The Blue Hose fell behind 3-0 after two innings, but the offense began to click in the top of the third as PC pushed one run across. Two runs followed in the fourth and three more in the fifth. Meanwhile, PC's pitching duo of Mark Dudley and Michael Burns was shutting down the Owls' bats.

Any doubts about the outcome were put to rest in the top of the eighth when the Blue Hose exploded for six runs and a 12-3 lead that would prove to be the final margin of victory.

Seven Blue Hose batters collected two hits apiece, led by centerfielder Ty Bouknight, who hit his sixth home run of the season, added a single, stole his 18th base, scored two runs, and drove in three runs. Freshman second baseman Davis Rice added two doubles, two RBIs, two runs scored, and a stolen base.

Other strong offensive performances came from shortstop Jamie Carter, who had two singles and a sacrifice fly to drive in three runs and score a run himself, first baseman Bucky O'Hara, with a double and single, an RBI, and a run scored; and rightfielder Chris Turco, with a pair of singles that drove in two runs while scoring one himself.

Dudley pitched five strong innings, yielding six hits and three runs while walking only one batter. The win improves his record to 5-3. Burns was credited his first save of the year after four innings of two-hit, shutout relief.

Meanwhile, Kennesaw State went through four pitchers for the afternoon, with none lasting more than 3.2 innings.

PC continued its winning ways when sophomore outfielder James Gritter hit a game-winning single in the bottom of the 10th inning to lead the Blue Hose to a 12-11 win over the visiting Flying Fleet of Erskine College Thursday afternoon, Apr. 13, in collegiate baseball action.

PC took control of the game early, going up 5-0 in the fourth inning, thanks, in part, to a pair of solo home runs by senior outfielder Brian Richie and senior catcher Brad Teal. The Flying Fleet fought back to tie the game at 5-5 in the top of the fifth, highlighted by senior second baseman Bill Gamble's three-run home run. The Blue Hose regained the lead in the bottom of the inning on an RBI-single by senior shortstop Jamie Carter, but Erskine added two runs on sophomore first baseman Derrick Wilson's two-run homer in the sixth to take a 7-6 lead into the seventh.

Erskine pushed the lead to 9-8 entering the ninth inning after the Blue Hose had picked up a pair of runs in the bottom of the seventh. The Flying Fleet added to the lead at 10-8 on an RBI-single in the top of the ninth by freshman outfielder Jeff Pruitt. PC responded in the bottom of the inning when Richie hit a two-RBI single to tie the game at 10-10. Erskine went ahead 11-10 in the top of 10th on freshman first baseman John Honea's RBI single.

The Blue Hose went to work in the bottom of the inning with two straight singles by Carter and pinch hitter redshirt freshman Matt Warren followed by an RBI-single from senior centerfielder Ty Bouknight to tie the game at 11-11. After a wild pitch by Erskine pitching, Gritter hit his game-winning single over the first baseman's head to scored pinch runner junior Matt Martunas to win the game.

PC was led at the plate by Richie, who went three-for-five with three RBIs and a home run, followed by Carter, who went three-for-four with one RBI. Bouknight went two-for-six, while Teal went one-for-five with a solo home run.

On the mound, sophomore righthander Ryan Senningen picked up his fifth win of the season against one defeat. Senningen came off the bench to go four innings, allowing four earned runs on eight hits.

Erskine was led by Wilson, who went three-for-three with two runs scored and a home run, while Gamble went two-for-four with a home run. Pruitt, freshman second baseman Luke Fleniken, and junior third baseman Allen Lang each picked up three hits. Flying Fleet relief pitcher senior Todd Harless took the loss to drop to 3-3 on the season after going three and one-third innings and allowing four earned runs on six hits.

PC improved to 35-17 on the season, while Erskine fell to 19-27. The Blue Hose extend their win streak to six straight and 11 of their last 13.

PC ended the regular season at home this past weekend in a key SAC matchup with Wingate University. Results were unavailable at press time.

"We're very excited about our upcoming schedule next season," Dickey said. "Our team is looking forward to a highly competitive schedule and another successful season of Blue Hose football."

The Blue Hose will open the 2000 campaign on the road when they travel to Carrollton, Ga., to face the Braves of West Georgia State University on Sept. 2 at 7 p.m. The next weekend the Blue Hose open their home season by facing NCAA Division I-AA Charleston Southern University on Sept. 9 at 1:30 p.m. as part of Scotsman Club Day 2000.

SGA Executive Council to receive salaries amidst controversy

by Doodle Harris
Managing Editor

During the Student Government Association (SGA) Spring Retreat this past April (28-29), the SGA were presented a budget line designating $2400 to be distributed in salaries amongst the members of the SGA executive board. These positions include president, vice president, treasurer, secretary and Judicial Council Chairperson.

that "we will not take anything away that's worthwhile to the SGA" (Blue Stocking, Volume 95, Issue 13).

"If we want to do the job right, we are doing it all the time," said Liz Woods, SGA vice president. "Being able to pay the Executive Council, as small as it is, allows more effective leaders to serve the student body without the restraints of time and money."

According to the minutes of the April 28-29 SGA retreat, the salaries came to the SGA as already approved; however, of SGA salaries in the ad-hoc committee proposal, in the April 17th meeting.

Spearman continued by calling the lack of recorded minutes "atypical."

Last year, former president Jay Philpott formed an ad-hoc committee consisting of the executive council, class presidents and one addition representative from each class.

The committee's purpose was to investigate the Student Government Financial Committee as well as discuss salaries.

Woods, who served on the ad-hoc committee, summed up the committee's conclusion.

"The responsibilities of the Executive Council leave no time for an outside job," said Woods.

However, three of the five members of the council have part time jobs on campus.

Both Spearman and Jenkins are resident assistants, earning over $1500 a year. In addition, treasurer T.J. Ackery works in the finance office in the administration building.

POINT

Bravo to Judicial Council, Student Volunteer Services

From the time potential students first tour of Presbyterian College until hearing commencement speeches on the West Plaza, we learn to associate two things with PC: honor and service. Together, these two intangible ideas become the concrete cornerstones upon which everything else resides. We here at the Bluestocking would like to congratulate SVS and Judicial Council for emphasizing these ideals during this year's freshmen/transfer orientation.

This year SVS tackled the job of organizing 348 PC rookies and 34 orientation guides into a force that cleaned graveyards and entertained both Clinton's youngest and oldest citizens. What's more, SVS pulled it off with flying colors, demonstrating the college's devotion to service while instilling that devotion into its newcomers. Clintonites were reassured of our commitment to more important things than violating their noise ordinances; students were reassured that they make a difference in their surroundings. Nothing short of a monumental round of applause and gratitude belongs to the coordinators and interns that managed the events.

In addition, applause to the Judicial Council. For the first year, the JC participated in a retreat to educate themselves about the Honor Code and to study possible improvements that could benefit the entire student body. Then, at the big event - the Honor Code signing - Sunday night, both Dr. Baker and Luke Ellis delivered rousing testimonials before all the freshmen and transfers finished signing the Honor Code ten minutes early. JC has decided to become more of a feared select few. JC has grown to a thriving, visible movement of students waving banners of integrity.

As always, orientation resembles summer camp. Among the shaving cream fight, the video wall, the theme parties and downtown Clinton, returning students show new students their values and priorities. This year, those values and priorities have extended beyond "just having a good time" to "having a good thing to do with your time." Upperclassmen leaders have stepped up to install in the foundations in their life and their college careers. Honor and Service will now echo not only in the upperclassmen's ears, but heartily resound in the hearts of our freshmen and transfers as well.

SGA begins the year with high hopes, goals

Oh, the Places You'll Go! Orientation 2000 was a great success, everything from the Downtown Block Party to the Signing of the Honor Code. Participation from the new students, Orientation Guides, Student Government, faculty, and administration helped to bring about this great success. On behalf of the Student Government Association, I would like to extend my gratitude to all of the PC Community.

Now that Orientation is over and classes have begun, the SGA is excited and ready for this academic year. I would like to take time now to share with you some of the goals and objectives that we will take on this year: making available state and local newspapers in GDH and Springs in order to keep us informed about the world we live in, researching the feasibility of a student copier and fax machine in the H-P computer lab, increasing the number of residence hall lobbies and outdoor telephones, continuing to work with the Residence Hall Association to make improvements within the residence halls, overseeing the operation of the SCOTS BlueLine and improving communications among campus organizations.

Committees of the Student Government are working on these goals as well as many others. 2000-2001 will be an exciting and busy year for your new Student Government Association.

The Student Government has some empty seats! Spaces are still available to serve on SGA. Seats for one Sophomore and one Junior Class Representative are available. Applications are due today by 1:00pm.

Representation from the freshmen class is very essential to Student Government. Freshmen will have the chance to elect a freshmen class president and four class representatives. All freshmen that are interested in being officers for their class should be on the look out for applications soon.

On behalf of the Student Government, I wish everyone success this academic year. We are honored and excited to be able to represent you this year and will work hard to accomplish and resolve your concerns.

Education examined from a different perspective:
Outside of the United States the issue appears different

Welcome back everyone! Here we stand at the beginning of another (or perhaps your first) academic year at PC. For me, the beginning of each year is fresh, new and full of possibilities. Old study habits will be changed this year (I say to myself). Projects will be handed in on time; no - early this year. I establish many a "new-school-year resolution." I am willing to bet I am not alone in doing this. However, old habits soon return. Deadlines seem to come out of nowhere, and we kick ourselves for not sticking to our "resolutions," or perhaps for never even thinking to make them. Our grades aren't turning out quite the way we'd envisioned at the start of the semester, and the stress mounts higher and higher.

This year, I invite you to look at your education from a different perspective. Education is much talked about in the media these days, especially during the 2000 Presidential campaign, and we have heard Al and George W. discuss and debate policies and issues surrounding education. What these potential leaders of our country hold as their stance on certain educational issues might be what wins our vote. Oh, it could steer us in the direction of his opponent. Clearly, it is important and valuable to us, as Americans, to educate our children and ourselves. What we must remember, however, is that as Americans, we live in one of the most privileged nations on Earth—a nation of abundant opportunity and wealth.

Last semester while I was studying in Oxford, I met a man named Ben. Ben was from South America, and I once asked him how he had come to England. He explained that he lived in a very poor part of South America and had always wanted to go to another country and make something of himself, to get an education. He saved and saved, and when he was 25, he left his father and friends and journeyed to England although he knew no English. His financial situation was bleak as well; since he had now decided to live in one of the most expensive nations in the world, he said, he would have to work. Knowing that Ben was in his second year in Oxford, I naively told him that I was impressed with how early he seemed to have picked up English since he had only been there for two years. He laughed and quickly corrected me saying, "Oh no, I have been here for ten years. I worked for the first eight. How else could I have afforded this education?" It was only then that I realized the sacrifice he had undergone for the sake of his education. He hadn't been home in ten years.

Ben's story was by no means the only one I heard while in England. There were over 2,000 international students at the school I attended, and many of them had similar situations. I met students from Germany, where your educational track (either manual labor or white collar job) is determined by a test you take around the beginning of high school. Also, there were students from Tunisia, India, Lesotho, Israel, Nepal, Bulgaria and Russia, some of whom traded bags of their own currencies for a mere 100 pounds when they arrived. Consequently, these were the students I saw first thing in the morning in the computer lab and the last ones still plugging away as I left at night. They were there two or more years, perhaps even to stay, because the prosperity that could be gained by an education in England was far greater than in their own country. They were some of the hardest working students I have ever met.

Now having been back in the states for the summer, several things about education in America stand out to me, and I now see some things differently than before. South Carolina, for example, gives South Carolina residents the Life scholarship, which is a $3,000 scholarship toward tuition at any school in South Carolina. The requirements are that the recipient must be a resident, have graduated from a South Carolina high school after 1995, complete 30 hours a year, and have a 3.0 GPA. Or then there is the South Carolina Tuition Grant, which gives students who are South Carolina residents up to $3,580 toward tuition at a South Carolina school just for getting their

F-A-S-A (a needs analysis form) to the government by June 30. These are just two of many scholarships that are available to students going to college in South Carolina. Then there are things like the Hope Scholarship for Georgia state residents, PC grants, early decision scholarships, scholarships for being Presbyterian, athletic scholarships, work scholarships, the list goes on and on. Almost eighty percent of PC students have some kind of scholarship (money they don't have to pay back) to get an education.

With that in mind, here is a statistic that I read this summer in Columbia's paper "The State." 40 percent of U.S. recipients lost their scholarships last year, mostly due to the requirement of maintaining a 3.0 GPA. While it is not entirely fair to say that all of these cases were due to lack of studying, it is a fair bet to say that most were.

When I read that statistic, I thought of the times that I didn't take my education seriously—especially in elementary and high school when school wasn't an option, and it made me acutely aware that going to PC was my choice. I chose to continue my education, and it was not a hard decision. I live in a nation where education is a given. A nation that asks "where" I will be attending school, not "if." And I was struck with how easy it all is for me, an American citizen. Compared to many of the students I met, finding the financial assistance to go to school here has been a walk in the park.

So this year I am starting with new resolutions. I will take my education seriously. I will remember my changed perspective. I will appreciate the fact that I am being educated at an institution of honor and integrity. I will thank those who made it possible. And I will remember not to take it for granted.

I can only imagine what Ben would accomplish if he were given $3,000 to do his dream of an education. What will you accomplish with the money you have been given for yours?

Why don't we ever welcome back seniors?

With all the obligatory welcoming of freshmen (and women) the past two weeks, I think it's high time to welcome the upperclassmen (and women) back to campus. Yes, I know that the "Welcome Back Bash" at GDH was designed to fill this need, but really I think upperclassmen deserve more, don't you?

Shouldn't we be celebrating and informing those who have come back for their first, second, third or fourth year (especially those living in Georgia) just as much as we celebrate and inform those who are coming for their first?

Now, I am not saying that every class needs a three-day orientation that resembles summer camp, but I think it would be proper to have some sort of introductory speech for each class, not just the freshmen. But since we have nothing official (The Griff welcomed), here is my advice to each class, besides the freshmen, on what to expect from this year.

*Sophomores: Welcome back; now get to work! Seriously, as sophomores you have perhaps the best combination of excitement, energy and experience of any other class. Many of you are in new leadership positions as RAs, SVS coordinators, club officers, and class representatives.

Take advantage of those opportunities—after a year you know what to do and you're not yet burned out over trying to do it. You have the chance to be creative without worrying what has been done before. Treasure the past but don't be bound by it. You make the future. (Get some rest too, or you will get burned out.) Cherish your experience and the chance to show someone else the ropes. You are no longer the bottom rung and can teach others what PC is all about.

*Juniors: This college thing is getting to be pretty routine now isn't it? You know where everything is, you have a pretty good handle on what you're doing and you know many older as well as younger people. You're in the middle and you're doing fine. Right? Well, sort of.

I can only speak from my experience, but last year, my junior year, was hard work followed by extremely hard work. Besides being campus leaders, many of you are beginning to get into classes for your major. That can be fun because you don't have any core requirements left, but it could also be quite frustrating, especially if you decide that what you thought you wanted to major in is not really what you want to major in. Many of you will only be at PC for half a year; the other half will be spent overseas in England, France, Spain, Australia, China or India (to just name a few). Hopefully you will come back from your travels a little wiser, a little stronger and a little better informed of the world outside our pleasant bubble than you were before.

*Seniors: And here we come to the end of what little I know. I cannot really say anything at all in terms of what to expect or prepare for, because being a senior myself, I don't know—no one ever told me either.

My roommate (also a senior) told me that he was excited about this year because "it is exciting to be standing on the verge of something unpredictable." Although he was talking in a slightly different context, I think what he said applies to the beginning of the year. There's no real telling of what to expect. No matter what anyone tells you in a speech, a class, a first meeting, or an orientation event, what will happen this year will be totally unexpected. There is no standard sophomore, junior or senior, just as there is no standard sophomore, junior or senior student. No mere words can prepare you for what is about to come. So my real advice and welcome to all the sophomores, juniors and seniors is this:

Welcome back. It's good to see you. I expect the unexpected and let your own experience be your guide.

And that goes double for the freshmen.

Juniors and Seniors:

If you are interested in taking the GRE, the GMAT, the LSAT, MCAT, or other PRACTICE graduate exams, you must sign up in the Career Services office prior to Thursday, Sept. 14. Practice exams will be administered on Sept. 17 from 2:00 to 5:00 p.m.

PC IN BRIEF

McCabe wins literary award

Dr. Nancy McCabe, assistant professor of English, has been awarded a Pushcart Prize, one of the foremost literary honors in the nation, for her essay, "The End of the Tunnel."

"I am very proud of Nancy McCabe for winning this important national award," said Dr. David Gillespie, vice president for academic affairs and dean of the faculty. "She is one of the most prolific scholars at PC and already has made a considerable name for herself, especially in the new genre known as creative nonfiction."

Nominations for the Pushcart Prize, including poetry, short stories and essays, are submitted annually by journal editors and by contributing editors to the anthology "Pushcart Prize: Best of the Small Presses." McCabe's essay will appear this fall in the publication's 25th edition.

"[W]riting is such a tough business with shrinking markets and lots of competition," said McCabe. "Most of us just go on doing it because we love it, not because there are a lot of external rewards, so something like the Pushcart is a wonderful affirmation."

Carol International House to host open house, art project

This weekend will mark the official opening of the Carol International House (CIH). Susan Masson, interim coordinator of CIH programs, and the house residents invite all students to three "Grand Opening" events.

CIH's Opening ceremony will take place this afternoon from 4:30-6:30 in the courtyard of the house. The ceremony will feature an invocation by Dr. Griffith and a blessing for the house. An open house featuring tours and tapas will follow the ceremony.

The second event is an acoustic concert by the Arlan Gibson Duo. The concert, which is co-sponsored by SUB, will begin Friday night at 7:30pm in the atrium of CIH. Complimentary coffee provided by Elaine's Gift Shop and other goodies will be available.

On Saturday, Sept. 2, from 2:00-6:00, CIH will open its doors for a Spanish art project. Senior Aaron Collier, an art major, will lead a hands-on project that will explore Picasso's "Girl Before a Mirror" and Miro's "Carnival of Harlequin." Participation in this event is limited, so you must sign-up in Springs or call Susan Masson at ext. 3705 to reserve your place.

If you have any question or concerns about these and other CIH programs, please contact Masson at the above extension.

Orientation service project offers freshmen glimpse of things to come by Doodle Harris and Ben Acton

Editors

Freshmen Orientation: moving in, Dr. Gillespie's infamous Anna Abington story, picnic, block party, placement test, service project... SERVICE PROJECT? That's right. Last Friday afternoon, Aug. 25, the freshmen and transfers participated in the first ever freshmen service project as part of their orientation at Presbyterian College.

"Presbyterian College believes that service is very important," said Student Volunteer Services (SVS) intern Jennifer Glenn. "We, as students of Presbyterian, need to work hard to uphold our school's motto, 'While we live, we serve.'"

The service projects found PC's newest arrivals in various locations in both Clinton and nearby towns.

Three orientation groups carpooled to three different homes for the elderly in the area: Frampton Hall, Presbyterian Home, and Bailey Manor. Four groups tackled cemetery clean-ups, restoring and weed-eating abandoned cemeteries in Clinton and Mountville. One group found their way to Eastside Elementary School to tutor students for the afternoon, and nine groups walked down to the gym for some one-on-one time with students from Thornwell and Martha Denny Schools.

"It's nice to make somebody else feel good," said Freshman Craig Morrow.

The service project was a first step in Dr. Griffith's long term plan to restructure Freshmen/Transfer Orientation. In addition to lengthening orientation, Griffith hopes to have an entire Service Day instead of just one afternoon.

"SVS and Service Day are the 'gunner pigs' for this new type of Orientation," said Glenn. "I believe that service day is a great way to educate freshmen and let them see some of the amazing things that SVS offers to all students."

Although most groups were too busy to stop for an interview, a couple of participants at Bailey Manor were eager to relate their enthusiasm.

"I just enjoy talking to [the residents]," said freshman Paula Brock. "We have a lot in common. They live here and we live in dorms. You can relate."

"It makes you feel great to brighten their day," said Jim Busch, another freshman.

Glenn agreed that the service project was a success. "Service Day was a huge success, and I am very happy with how everything turned out," she said. "The places we went to serve were all very appreciative and happy to see that Presbyterian is working hard to help our community. I am very excited about this year with SVS, and I look forward to working with the freshmen throughout the year."

"I just must say that I am thankful unto God for his grace for it was because of God that this event went well," said Ms. Sheila D. Hill, associate dean of students, who works in an advisory role with SVS. "It was one of SVS's greatest events in the four years that I have been here at PC. Service rocks!"

Glenn also said that she hopes the service event will affect PC for years to come.

"Our hope is that this experience plants a seed that will germinate over the next four years of their lives and continue to bloom as they leave PC," she said.

Dr. Seuss welcomes Freshmen/Transfers

by Tara Sluder
Assignments Editor

Upperclassmen donned in tall, red and white striped hats and matching socks welcomed 332 freshmen to the campus on Aug. 23. This 121st freshman class marks the fourth largest class to enter PC since its founding in 1880. With the inclusion of transfer students from the US in addition to all over the world, the total number of students who have joined the PC community this semester is 348.

"On The Places You'll Go," this year's orientation theme was patterned after the famous Dr. Seuss children's book. Enthusiastic orientation guides (OGs), readily identifiable by their bright yellow T-shirts and "Cat in the Hat" attire, helped freshmen move into their dorm rooms. Cars littered the campus as students filed in almost every dorm on campus. OGs and SGA members arrived on campus early to begin preparing for the arrival of the new students.

"The OGs have been very energetic and enthusiastic," said David Schofield, SGA Religious Council Representative, "and we appreciate everything they have done this week. SGA has also worked very hard to make orientation a success. The freshmen really seem to be enjoying the activities."

"The OGs also enjoyed getting to know the freshmen and participating in the activities."

"I'm having a great time meeting all the freshmen and getting them into PC," said Patrick Riley, OG.

Besides the traditional barbecue, downtown Clinton block party, activities fair, theme party, "field day" and other events, orientation included a few new activities this year. Among these activities were an SVS service project, late night movies in Springs, dinner at the new Carol International House (CIH) and entertainment.

Ellis exhibits integrity, honor in leadership

by Ben Acton
Editor-in-Chief

Chances are if you have not seen Luke Ellis, you have heard him.

"If a bassoon could somehow go through puberty, it might be as deep as Luke's voice—maybe," Jay Howell, a friend and former roommate of Ellis, said.

In the past three years, Ellis, a senior from Tampa, Fla., has put that voice to good use.

Ellis is a former bass in the PC choir and currently is a member of Celtic Cross, a member and former moderator of Westminster Fellowship (WF) and a student leader/organizer/founder of Quodlibet, the debate style convocation which began last year under the guidance of Ellis and three other since graduated students.

The self-described "undeclared but completed Spanish major and declared but incomplete psychology major" has also spent time in Spain as part of a study abroad experience which he called both "mind expanding" and humbling.

"Being able to speak Spanish was really neat, because there are suddenly 300 million more people in the world that you can talk to [that you could not before]," he said. "It was kind of a humbling experience. It has to be when you go into a store and are embarrassed to try asking for a glass of milk. 'Because you don't want to sound like a stupid American.'"

Most recently, however, Ellis used his deep bass voice as the new chair of the Judicial Council, honoring the tried and true orientation tradition of intimidating freshmen while they sign the Honor Code.

But more impressive than Ellis's voice is his enthusiasm concerning his new position.

"I'm excited about some reevaluation of the Judicial Council," he said. "I really like the idea of honor, and I think it is an exciting time for thinking about honor [at PC] and I think that's one reason I am excited to be in [the Judicial Council] position."

Ellis checking out the desk in his new pad at CIH

"With the theme of the [Russell Program] being integrity, with students already beginning to reexamine the judicial process at PC, it's an exciting place to be," he added.

Ellis has already begun to translate this excitement into some tangible accomplishments.

This year the Judicial Council has received T-shirts, an office space in Springs Campus Center and a small budget. In addition, they also participated in an extensive orientation process.

Ellis's hope is that these changes will make the council more visible and better prepared to meet student needs.

"There were some reforms that were passed last spring that will make the council a more central body to the [judicial] process and put decision making more into the hands of students than it has been before," he said. "[The Judicial Council is] still working on some more things; we're still brainstorming and organizing ideas. What I hope to accomplish, what we all hope to accomplish is that we are beginning something new that will continue."

According to Dr. Richard Baker, associate professor of philosophy and the faculty advisor of the Judicial Council, Ellis's leadership skills make him a perfect fit for the job as Judicial Council Chair. "Luke is a leader with integrity," Baker said. "He is organized and knows what he wants to do at a meeting and is still willing to listen to others."

Rachel Diana, friend and member of the Judicial Council agreed with Baker.

Senior Spotlight

Hometown: Tampa, Florida
Major: Psychology (declared)
Spanish (undeclared)
Activities: Judicial Council, Quodlibet, Westminster Fellowship, Celtic Cross

"[For Luke] it's not just about leading, but making sure that everything works out for the best for all the people involved," she said.

While Ellis is excited about the prospect of setting a precedent for the Judicial Council that other classes will follow, what really lights his fire is Quodlibet.

"Quodlibet is just something that I love," he said. "I just love the idea of Quodlibet, and I hope it is something that continues. That's sort of my baby, although I'm giving up for adoption if anybody wants it."

Ellis unpacked that statement by saying that he hopes that this year's freshmen will pick up where others have left off.

"Step up, stand apart, rise to the occasions that are presented to [you]," Ellis advised to freshmen, "because there will be those times if you keep your eyes open and pay attention a little bit."

Howler boosts PC into the digital age with computer music

by Hank Coleman
News Editor

Dr. Robert Howler is Presbyterian College's new academic computer technician.

Howler, who started working for the school six weeks ago, is responsible for the technical support and repair for all of the academic computers in the labs and classroom on campus.

Howler received his doctorate and masters degrees in music composition from the University of South Carolina and his bachelor's degree in music composition from the Berkeley School of Music in Boston, Mass.

The Fayetteville, N.C. native said that he learned how to install and repair computers while trying to make music with them.

"I've been interested in making music with computers since I was fourteen," Howler said. "The most important thing about me is the electronic music that I do."

Howler mentioned that electronic music consists of typing a bunch of numbers into a music computer program, pressing start and seeing what happens.

Howler also said that he will begin teaching a few music technology classes for the music department starting this spring or next fall.

Howler installed a brand new digital audio workstation in Edmunds Hall last month as part of his job. The new workstation will allow the school to record special events that take place in the auditorium like CEP speakers, chorus concerts and other student recitals.

"We can now record a concert, edit it and then mix it down to a CD all right there in the booth in Edmunds," Howler said. "Eventually, PC wants to stream the live events over the internet using this system as well."

Howler said that his wife and their two young children will hopefully be moving into a house in Clinton soon. "I like the small town and the down home feel that it creates, and PC is a wonderful school," said Howler.

He added that he could see himself at PC for a long time to come.

Soccer ready to kick-off, run wild in SAC

by Scott Moore
Staff Writer

Soccer season is starting the year off here at PC with a bang. Both teams re-energized as they came off weeks of preseason practices. The women's team is striving to repeat last year's accomplishments in addition to making it past the first round in the NCAA/Division II Tournament. The men's team has a new coach, Bret Boulware, at their front Boulware, and all is looking good.

"Everyone is excited about the season," said Junior Stephen Replogle. "The new coach is bringing variety to the field. There is a new sense of team unity, and we have lots of upper class men."

Boulware brings with him two goals for his team.

"My ultimate goal is to win the national championship," Boulware said. "Other athletic goals are to win the regular season championship, and the conference tournament."

The new coach has also stated that he has academic expectations of his players.

"I expect 100 percent graduation," Boulware said.

Women's soccer coach Brian Purcell expects no less of his team.

"Every season's goals are the same," Purcell said.

For the past four years Purcell and his Lady Blue Hose have captured the South Atlantic Conference (SAC) regular Season Championship. They have not, however, won the SAC tournament since 1996.

"We also hope to get a bid to the NCAA/Division II National tournament, and to make it past the first round," said Purcell.

Last year the Lady Blue Hose received a bid to the National Tournament but were defeated in the first round.

"We're going to be good; there is no doubt about it," team manager Kaylor Lyon said. "We have the potential to go all the way."

"We're a really young team, but we have the speed and skill to step up and defeat our opponents," said Senior Captain Katie Kelly.

As things come together and with weeks of hard practices coming to an end, both teams are geared up for scrimmages as they strive towards their respective goals.

The women's team played the Stone Mountain Spirit on the Pondo on Saturday, August 26. The Lady Blue Hose were defeated 2-0 in their first game against the upper level club team. On Sunday, August 27 they played at Emory University, down in Atlanta. As of press time there were no scores or stats available.

The men are scheduled to have their first regular season game on August 30, against Morehouse College in Atlanta, as of press time no stats or scores were available. Their next game is September 2, versus King College here at 2 pm.

The women's first game is today in Florida against Barry University, ranked number three. The Lady Blue Hose are going into today's game ranked eighth in the preseason poll.

"The team chemistry is great on the practice field, but I have yet to see them in a scrimmage," said Boulware.

Boulware also wants to have more exciting games by having his players pass the ball more rather than sending it up the field.

"I see good form from both freshmen and upperclassmen, and they are all working really hard," said Purcell of his team.

"I am really excited about this season as our team is full of depth and ability as we have kept many good players and brought on some very talented freshmen," said senior captain Courtney Swanson.

"Coach Boulware is bringing a lot of new ideas to the team," said senior captain Walter Howard. "He has made us work hard, but that is what we need, he has also helped the team to get a fresh attitude and brought a lot of excitement to the playing field."

Football team looks to improve on '99 record of 7-4

Senior All-American wide receiver Travis Smith makes a move in the open field during last year's game against Carson Newman. Smith is one of the most prolific receivers in PC history.

The Presbyterian College Blue Hose football team is back in action again this year as they get set to begin the 2000 season.

The football team, which is ranked 22nd in the nation in preseason polls, welcomed back to campus a solid core of 30 returning lettermen along with 34 freshmen. There are 13 letterman returning to the team from the offense and 17 from the defense. The team started practicing on Aug. 13 after moving into the dorms.

"We are very excited about the athletes that we have on the team," said Head Football Coach Daryl Dickey. "They have worked very hard during the two-a-day practices. Our freshmen have made a smooth transition from the high school level and that is directly related to the veteran leadership that our upperclassmen have shown."

PC has 17 starters who are returning this season to help boost the team past last year's fourth place finish in the conference. The Blue Hose finished the season with an overall record of 7-4 and 4-4 in the South Atlantic Conference.

"We always hope to do better," said Dickey. "Our goals every year are to play well, win the conference and make it to the NCAA Division II playoffs. We will give it our best shot to do better than last season."

Three PC veterans have been named a preseason All-American. Seniors Travis Smith and Damien Jackson and Junior Todd Cunningham were named to the "Don Hansen's Football Gazette" preseason All-America Team. Cunningham was also a finalist for the Harlon Hill Trophy last year, which is given to the most valuable player in NCAA Division II football.

Dickey, in his fourth year as Head Coach of the Blue Hose, added that he is excited about the Blue Hose's schedule this year.

PC's first game of the season is tomorrow when the team travels to Carrollton, Ga. to face State University of West Georgia.

Sheley brings wealth of experience to Athletics Director position

by Jack Carmody
Sports Editor

Following the June retirement of Allen Morris, Director of Athletics for the past five years, PC began its search for a new athletics director. PC had to look no further than Valerie Sheley.

Sheley brings a very comprehensive background in athletics. Sheley is originally from Great Britain but came to the United States on a track and field scholarship from Murray State University. While at Murray State, Sheley competed in the heptathlon, an event in which she was selected as All-American all for years. She graduated in 1986, with a bachelor of science degree in Physical Education and a minor in Youth Agency Administration.

Sheley was also an Olympic qualifier for the heptathlon for the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles for her native Great Britain.

After graduation from Murray State, Sheley went on to the University of Houston for her graduate work. There, she earned a master of education degree in Exercise Science.

Next stop for Sheley was the University of North Carolina at Asheville (UNC-Asheville). Sheley had several positions while at UNC-Asheville. She was the head coach for both men's and women's track and field. She also served in the physical education department and was the Director of Physical Education Activity Classes. Sheley was later promoted to Senior Women's Administrator. Her final position at the school was assistant director of athletics in charge of compliance and academics.

Sheley has a prior affiliation with the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA). In 1992, Sheley moved to Overland Park, Kansas to work for the NCAA as a legislative assistant. She has also held a position on the NCAA Division I Track and Field Committee.

After her stint in Kansas, Sheley went to the University of South Carolina where she served as director of athletics in charge of compliance. She held this position until coming to PC.

"Valerie Sheley brings a strong personal commitment to athletics and strong leadership abilities, and her commitment to academic integrity is second to none," Presbyterian College President John V. Griffith said. "She is a person of high energy who has a commanding presence and a quick wit. We are extremely excited about the skills she brings to a Blue Hose Athletic program steeped in a rich tradition."

What most drew Sheley to PC was the College's ability to mix athletics and academics.

"I am impressed with PC's ability to produce athletes without compromising academics," Sheley said. "That's really how it should be in higher education."

Sheley is also very optimistic about the future. With the additions of the new training room, the new soccer stadium, and the eventual construction of the new football stadium, Sheley believes PC will have some of the best Division II athletic facilities in the nation. She is also excited about all the new coaches that have joined the staff. With the increasing school enrollment, Sheley looks forward to having bigger athletic squads and adding even more coaches.

PC has won the South Atlantic Conference Athletic Excellence Award two of the past three years. Sheley will hope to add another SAC award to the trophy case this year as PC looks to continue its athletic dominance.

In the wee hours of one early morning during SGA's planning for freshmen orientation, three of us started remembering what our freshmen orientation was like... Here is our answer:

ment on the lawn of CIH provided by the Motown band "The Common People." Freshmen also had the option of viewing their rooms and dropping off items on Tuesday, Aug. 22 before moving in on Wednesday.

"I really like the leaders," said Allison Adams, freshman. "The OGs and upperclassmen were eager to help us move in and made us feel very welcome. I really enjoyed the service project and the block party."

In addition to welcoming the freshmen into the PC community, OGs and other upperclassmen greeted transfer students from around the world.

Orientation for these international students went beyond adapting to college life; they are adjusting to a new country.

"I am very excited to attend orientation," said Hannah Keen, from South Korea. "Orientation in America is much different than orientation in Korea. I was very shocked at the friendly relationship between the professors and the students here. It is much more strict in Korea. I also appreciate everything this school has done to make us feel welcome, like the Korean flag and the clock with Korean time in CIH. I am not very familiar with the food here yet, but I will be soon."

Expectations for the new class are high as PC begins another academic year. Students as well as administrators are excited about what the year has in store for PC.

"I've been very impressed thus far with the way things are going," said Joe Nixon, Dean of Students. "Arrival day and moving in went very smoothly. Attendance at the orientation events has been excellent. I have a feeling this freshman class will be a tremendous asset to PC."

he paid for his services.

"I know from personal experience that it's hard to hold down another job while serving on executive council," said Spearman. "But I also understand the need for true public service without personal benefit."

In the original proposal, Spearman was offered $200 a year.

However, once he refused to accept funds, Senior Class President Sara Hopper, suggested those funds be redistributed to the President and Vice President, giving both positions a $100-a-year raise. Hopper's motion passed.

"The main reason [I made the motion] is because it would be a lot easier to keep the money in the same budget line," said Hopper. "It is difficult to move stuff to other budget lines from one year to the next. It's way too confusing."

However, this year's SGA budget of $9700, an increase from last year's $7700 budget is yet to be approved. Ackerly admitted that she still had to tweak the budget before SGA's first meeting of the year.

According to Dean Nixon, the money has always been in the SGA budget. Ackerly admitted that the SGA had about $1700 in unused funds last year.

In addition to Spearman, Luke Ellis, Judicial Council chair, expressed his desire not to receive payment for his position.

"Creating a budget for the Judicial Council would have been a more effective way to use that money," said Ellis. "I did not accept the nomination for chair expecting to be paid."

Ellis also said that he had no opportunity to voice his opinion on the matter of salaries because he was studying abroad last spring.

This year's SGA was elected prior to any decisions for or against the issue of salaries. This spring, the candidates for Executive Council will be elected with the full knowledge of their prospective salaries.

"I do not believe anyone would run for an executive council position simply for the money," said Woods. "The time put in versus the amount being paid does not add up."

"If it did affect someone running for office, it would be apparent in their actions," said Ackerly.

"[Having compensation] follows right along with all our national leaders - Congress, the General Assembly, etc.," said Woods. "In my opinion, a student elected to a leadership position should be compensated to keep in line with our government as a whole."

Not to sound another, but I really don't need the money," said Spearman. "I am more than willing to serve the Student Government Association and Presbyterian College free of charge."

Alan Keyes speaks about Integrity and the media

by Hank Coleman
News Editor

Former United States Presidential candidate Dr. Alan Keyes addressed the Presbyterian College community on September 12 in Belk Auditorium as the opening speaker for the 2000-01 Russell Series on "Integrity and the Media."

Keyes boisterously demanded the attention of his audience as he debated tough issues that are facing the country as it moves into the 21st century. The topics of his speech ran the gamut of integrity in the media, immorality in the executive branch of government, bipartisan greed and the injustice that comes with absolute power that is spreading throughout the country. Keyes captivated his audience by asking hypothetical questions, joking about his love for the media and sharing stories to prove his points.

Keyes told the audience that there is a corruption of integrity in the media industries, "who make their money with products like violent movies and video games. He added that television commercials have gotten out of hand as well.

"The suggestive junk that goes on in American lives today, go on to sell things," Keyes said. "In commercials today, moral standards and integrity are fine as long as they don't get in the way of that decision to buy."

Keyes also warned the auditorium, which was packed with students, faculty and visitors, that the lack of integrity in America is not only limited to the media. The lack of integrity extends also to the individual citizen.

"What we decide is legal for us will ultimately become the standard of our society," he said.

Keyes added that the political leaders of the country in Congress and the White House only mirror the citizens which elected them to office. He added that the problem of integrity in the White House is not about one person, but a problem with the American people as a whole.

"The meaning of self-government goes beyond going into the voting booth and thinking that because we choose some congress person, we govern ourselves," said Keyes. "No, the tribunal on the bases which our future is decided, is the tribunal of our hearts, or our actions and our lives."

Keyes mentioned that the abuse of power in America has gotten out of hand, and it has led to injustice. He added that if America had the same power and opportunity as Napoleon or Hitler, he was not sure that America could resist the urge to abuse it.

"Nothing is as wicked as a majority with power," Keyes said, elaborating on this point.

"We stand on a new threshold of new possibilities of human power. If you want to be safe, it's a good idea that moral discipline increases as power does. Because if moral discipline goes down as power goes up, the gap between the two creates a gulf into which human decency is sucked."

Like the former presidential candidate on the campaign trail, Keyes took several opportunities to take pokes at both Republicans and Democrats alike.

"We pretend that there are two different parties, but in many instances there is only one party," he said. "The party of greed. The party that will sacrifice every standard of decency and mutual respect as long as there is a dollar to gain."

Presbyterian College President Dr. John Griffith said that Keyes was the best person to begin PC's look into integrity and the media because of his extensive dealings with the media and international attention he received while seeking the 1996 and 2000 Republican Presidential nominations.

"Dr. Keyes has the perspective that allows us to start this investigation of integrity in the media which places the responsibility on the individual," Griffith said. "He made that very clear today in a very powerful way, and I think that he started us off on this exploration in just the right way."

"The very mention of the word 'truth' makes people uneasy."

Alan Keyes

Keyes concluded his speech by saying that America is in the midst of a crisis of heart, soul and conscience. He added that America must meet that crisis head on. He mentioned that the answer does not lie with the country's leaders but in the individual choices people make to restore the nation back to a place of integrity.

"We act as if we really care about the issues, morality and integrity, but I'm not really sure that we do," Keyes said. "The very mention of the word 'truth' makes people uneasy."

"There is a great struggle that is going on. It's a struggle in the very soul of the American people."

POINT

Prank Calls Must Stop

For anyone who is unaware of the exceedingly high number of fire drills in freshmen dorms this year, here is your notification: PC has a problem. Some students believe it is funny to call unsuspecting freshmen, claiming to be Public Safety, and insisting they are running a test. These callers ask students to pull the fire alarms and no doubt watch from nearby as the dorms needlessly empty at such odd hours as 3 a.m., meanwhile Public Safety is called and the Residence Life Office grinds its teeth.

We here at "The Blue Stocking" find this action the epitome of "un-cool" and a flagrant disregard of the Honor Code. Whoever is making these prank calls is taking advantage of freshmen's ignorance and undermining the sense of trust and community PC brags about in its brochures and to each other. Besides, how is anyone to take a call from our actual Public Safety serious if he or she suspects another prank?

Neither "The Blue Stocking" nor the Judicial Council should have to beg anyone to follow either the Honor Code or the Code of Conduct that every student enrolled at this college signed. Is a signature that worthless to someone? We sign our checks, promising we have money in our bank accounts to pay off our debts, and that is merely money. We sign the roster in Springs to receive our packages, and those are merely tangible goods. We sign our rooming change slips, and that is merely location.

However, we urge everyone to remember that the Honor Code isn't "merely" anything. That signature ensures that you have more than money in your bank or cookies from mom. That signature is a statement of our belief in the importance of living in a Christian community while at Presbyterian College, and, with any luck, the rest of our lives. Each of us should take it personally when a member of our community violates that promise.

Perhaps by the release of this issue, PC's infamous prank caller will be identified (or better yet, turn in himself or herself), tried before the Judicial Council, see the errors of his or her ways and be well on the way to rehabilitation while sitting at home watching the rest of the Olympics with mom and dad. However, in the more probably unlikely event that he or she is still on campus, "The Blue Stocking" staff feels that the calls should stop and trusts their student body to see that they do.

Hey everyone! I hope that each of you have enjoyed your first few weeks back at PC. Classes and organizational meetings are back into full swing. Most of us are running around ninety miles per hour trying to get things done. Those of us who are seniors this year are beginning to have butterflies in our stomachs as we realize that we will soon be graduating and having to take a new direction in life. For those of you who still have a few years left at PC, I strongly encourage you to get involved in as much as you can. Visit different organizations and see what is offered! It is never too late to get into something new.

This summer I had the privilege of working with the children and youth at First Presbyterian Church in Aiken, SC. I knew in March, when I agreed to take the position, that it was going to be a summer filled with good times and learning experiences. I had no clue that it would be the best summer of my life!

My internship was, without a doubt, a dose of the real world. I worked at least five days a week with long hours. There were always things that needed to be done and not enough time to do them in. There were lots of days when I had to stay late to get things prepared for the next day's activities. The funny thing is I loved every single minute of it! I looked forward to going to work. On my week off, I missed the church and the people so much that I actually called to see how everyone was doing! The relationships that were built during the summer are some that I will treasure forever! I wish there were some way that I could let the children and youth of that church know what an impact they had on my life! However, words cannot express how much they mean to me. The laughs we shared as well as the headaches and times of stress all added to my experience. I love Presbyterian College, but I can honestly say that I did not want my job to end.

The reason I am telling you this is not so that you will go work in a church this summer, although that would be wonderful. I am sharing this to encourage you to think about what it is you really want to do with your life. Many times we get so caught up in doing the things we think we should do or we take the next step simply because it is the next step that we lose sight of our goal. What a horrible way to live life!

I found a quote a couple of months ago that now hangs on my wall. It says, "There are many things in life that will catch your eye, but only a few will catch your heart... pursue those."

This is the best way to guarantee a wonderful and rewarding life!

Letter to the Editor

Dear Blue Stocking,

After recently graduating, I returned back to PC to see the recent changes made to Springs Campus Center and GDH. With the construction of the Patrick Center and CHH being finished, PC does have a new look to it. I am excited about the direction PC is moving in.

I was lucky enough to find a brand new "Blue Stocking" in Springs. I was curious as to the students' feelings on the recent changes as well as the freshmen's reaction to PCG. However, I was disappointed to find that "The Blue Stocking" did not make those positive aspects of PC the headline in the first "Blue Stocking." Instead, it chose to focus on a controversial aspect of SGA that is not the most important issue at hand. I don't feel as though your first issue was welcoming to freshmen, students or recent alumni as myself at all. Instead of showering our new students with the many positive changes going on, such as the commitment PC has made to diversity and honor, "The Blue Stocking" chose to begin the new year amidst controversy. I was very disappointed to see the year started out this way. I hope your staff will commit themselves to a new focus and join the rest of campus in looking for ways to improve, not digress.

Sincerely,
Tabitha Wright, class of 2000

Off the Record

by Ben Acton
Editor-in-Chief

After hearing Dr. Griffith's speech at opening convocation about silly putty, I, like I am sure many of you, began to count the times I have had a similar experience.

Out of a count of roughly 12,652,389, I finally decided on a story that I could share with the rest of you. A warning, though: this is an odd story and it may not be completely apparent how this certain situation affected my understanding of ethics and integrity. To make it even stranger, this story is one I don't remember, but one that my brother loves to tell.

Back when I was little (either age two or three, like I said I don't remember), my favorite toy was my big wheel. For those of you who don't know what a big wheel is, it is basically a big plastic tricycle, but to a two-year old, it is the equivalent of a Harley. Now imagine me riding my big wheel (or "hog," if you will), minding my own business, when all of a sudden a neighborhood kid comes and pushes me off and takes my big wheel.

What do you think I did? Well, according to my brother, I asked the kid to get off. He refused. So, I did the next logical thing: I went back to the house, grabbed my brother's big, yellow plastic shovel and beat the kid over the head with it until he started crying and got off my big wheel. (My brother usually is laughing at this point in the story.)

Now, you might be asking yourself one of two things: a) is this true and/or b) what's the point—I mean if the kid took your big wheel, he should get a beating. To answer question a), I would ask you to re-read the last line of the first paragraph of this story. To answer the second question, how beating a kid over the head with a shovel affects my understanding of ethics, takes a bit longer to explain.

As I think back on this incident the main ethical problem is this: I returned a wrong for a wrong. That may have been justifiable (I mean, come on, the guy took my favorite toy!), but that really is beside the point. The philosopher Socrates stated that a truly ethical person, one who embodies integrity, would always strive to do what is right and just. One must never do wrong, even when one has been wronged. Never return an injury for an injury, for justice is hurt in the process.

Now I am not saying that as a 2 or 3 year old, one should understand the basic arguments of a Greek philosopher who lived some 2,400 years ago. But I still think Socrates's maxim holds true. And if it does hold true, it raises a lot of interesting questions for us as human beings, in general, and as PC students, in particular.

One such question might be centered around how we hand out punishments of Honor Code violations or how we resolve differences between the different (and sometimes competing) groups on campus. In these and other instances, it is good to remember that we are first called to do what is right, just and good. Sometimes that involves us looking beyond our own biases and prejudices and seeing the other side's argument in the best possible light. Sometimes it might mean sticking to our convictions, but at least admitting that someone who does not share those convictions might have a good point.

Because if we cannot do this, if we cannot discuss things openly and honestly in the attempt to find and do what is right, if we cannot refrain from hurting each other with our own versions of the truth, we will wind up hearing only the sound of our shovels hitting each other in the head.

Opening Convocation focuses on honor, integrity

by Tara Sluder
Assignments Editor

On Tuesday, September 5, Presbyterian College officially opened its 121st academic year as faculty and seniors walked down the aisles of Belk Auditorium to the sound of bagpipes at Opening Convocation.

Fellow students, family and Clinton community members stood as the graduating class walked in to what would be their last Opening Convocation at PC.

After a welcome by Tanisha Jenkins, president of the Student Government Association, and special recognitions by Dr. Gillespie, vice president for academic affairs, the Martha Anne Green Award for Service to Church and College was presented to this year's recipient, Dr. Jack Presseau, Cornelison Professor Emeritus of Christian Education.

In addition, two honorary degrees of Doctor of Public Service were conferred to Claude Crocker and Calhoun Gault.

After the singing of the anthem and reading of scripture, Dr. Griffith stepped up to give his annual address to the PC community.

He began his year's address entitled "Silly Putty Experiences" with a question for the audience: "What would be revealed by television cameras if life at PC were to be documented?"

Directing his own mini-series entitled "Blue Hose Time," a spin-off of the popular show "Survivor," Griffith questioned what message PC would send forth to its "audience."

"Dr. Griffith is a very effective speaker," Susan Masson, interim coordinator of CHH programs, said. "I like the way he is able to connect things, whether it be 'Survivor,' or whatever everyone is paying attention to."

Griffith also told a story from his childhood about an incident which he called a "silly putty experience" and which taught him a few lessons about being honest and discerning right from wrong.

Many students agreed that Griffith's speech was geared directly toward the students and that he related the message in a very effective manner.

"I thought Dr. Griffith's speech really related to us," junior Kaylor Lyon said. "It seemed like he was trying to reach out to us as students, even in the presence of faculty and administrators."

"He drives it home, and you remember it," senior Katie Moore said.

Griffith listed the six values—liberal learning, faith, service, community, vigor and integrity—as the qualities that hold PC together. Of the six, he mentioned integrity as the core value and praised PC for its high standards and high level of integrity.

"I respected Dr. Griffith's message because I think that integrity can be the core value of PC," senior Michael York said. "But I think we have a couple of hurdles to get over before it is the core value."

As for the prize on "Blue Hose Time," Griffith said that "here, knowledge as truth is the prize. I'm afraid there's little room for Rich [the winner of "Survivor" ed.] at PC. Here, all of us can be winners."

Bagpipers lead PC's faculty and seniors as they marched into Belk Auditorium.

"This entire enterprise is about handing on to you the torch of truth," Griffith told students. "What you teach when your time comes must be truth."

Judicial Council makes improvements

by John Catoe
Staff Writer

"That's a funny looking 'K,'" Judicial Council Chair Luke Ellis said when surveying the minutes written by Dr. Richard Baker, associate professor of philosophy and Judicial Council advisor, for a council meeting.

Besides strange representations of the eleventh letter of the alphabet, the minutes contained the strengths, weaknesses, hopes and changes to the Judicial Council.

The four greatest changes to the council were the extended orientation for council members, which took place prior to freshmen orientation, new t-shirts, the change in decision making to the original decision-making body. Since the Appeals Board has a greater number of faculty serving on it than students, the change in decision making gives more power to the Judicial Council, which has more students serving on it than faculty.

"We're working to give more power to the student, which is where it should be," Judicial Council member senior Blake McGaha said.

Many Judicial Council members have accepted the changes with open arms and are looking forward to the year under Ellis's leadership. "Take has done an outstanding job," McGaha said.

"This is a really exciting year because of the focus on integrity, getting students more involved and making the Honor Code more accessible to students," Judicial Council member senior Rachel Diana added.

Although changes are taking place, McGaha also stated that one thing will remain the same: the Judicial Council's commitment to the students of PC.

"We're students, just like everybody else, working for PC," he said.

The purpose of these changes to the Judicial Council is to place greater emphasis on student empowerment and fairness in the judicial process than there has been in the past.

The changes in visibility, for instance, are meant to help students take an active role in the Judicial Council.

"Visibility is a key to student ownership; before they can claim it, they must know it's there," Ellis said.

But other policy changes have given more power to the students. One example is that the Appeals Board no longer can change a verdict of punishment; it can only send a case back to the original decision-making body. Since the Appeals Board has a greater number of faculty serving on it than students, the change in decision making gives more power to the Judicial Council, which has more students serving on it than faculty.

"We're working to give more power to the student, which is where it should be," Judicial Council member senior Blake McGaha said.

Many Judicial Council members have accepted the changes with open arms and are looking forward to the year under Ellis's leadership. "Take has done an outstanding job," McGaha said.

"This is a really exciting year because of the focus on integrity, getting students more involved and making the Honor Code more accessible to students," Judicial Council member senior Rachel Diana added.

Although changes are taking place, McGaha also stated that one thing will remain the same: the Judicial Council's commitment to the students of PC.

SUB: helping PC "make our own fun"

by Ashley Burdette and Powers Strickland
Staff Writers

How do students have fun at PC? Just ask Dr. Chris Grant, the Student Union Board's (SUB) new faculty advisor.

"Admissions tells you at PC we make our own fun and SUB does more to make fun on this campus than anyone else and for free," said Grant, Professor of political science.

With the eagerness and enthusiasm of both Grant and SUB, this year has already started off in full swing.

"It's only the second week of school, and we've done about eight to nine events already," senior Zeta Lamberson, SUB president, said.

Some of these events include activities during Freshmen Orientation, such as the Theme Dance and the Block Party, the Welcome Back Bash, the Spirit Bus to Georgia, the Acoustic Cafe and the PC Cinema.

"I think the [Tacky] dance was also a good thing—people let loose and we all got to show our personalities by dressing tacky," freshman Alicia Parmenter said. "The downtown block party gave me the chance to discover the different businesses here in Clinton as well as meet other PC students."

Along with the many events SUB has already put on for the students, many more are planned for both this semester and next semester. One of SUB's main events for the fall semester is the Homecoming festivities.

"There will be a motown band with lots of dancing," sophomore Jenny Thompson, SUB secretary, said. "It's always a lot of fun and basically just good times with the students."

Besides the Homecoming Festivities, the SUB threw one of their largest events of the fall, the Inflatable Games Day, which included a Parathead's Paradise, a live band.

"It's probably one of the biggest events we do in the fall," Lamberson said.

"Getting involved in SUB is easy to do," said Lamberson.

"Our goal for this year is to have maybe 100 people [serving on committees], Lamberson said. "The way we're set up you can't really narrow it down to that. If there's more, it rocks my world."

Grant heartily agrees with Lamberson on getting involved in SUB.

"Because we're such a small campus, there are so many opportunities to be in the thick of it," Grant said.

"Just come talk to a committee person or an officer," Lamberson said. "Tell them which committee you'd be interested in working on."

Lamberson continued that the more student support, the better the organization is.

"You get a diverse opinion by having a diverse group of people," Lamberson said. "We want everybody to just get involved and have fun."

The life of SUB also depends on faculty involvement.

Dr. Eric Johnson (former SUB faculty advisor) did an outstanding job in involving the faculty, Grant, who hopes the faculty involvement will continue said.

More than anything, the students stressed the importance of SUB's work.

"We provide many different activities and events that keep the Presbyterian campus life active," said Thompson. "We basically provide a variety of ways for the students to be involved in their campus."

Sloan dazzles crowds in basketball games, leads as MSU president

by Anne Sullivan
Staff Writer

This issue's Senior Spotlight is no stranger to many PC students.

Rachel Sloan can be found dazzling the crowd at a women's basketball game, stressing out over an upcoming math test or just hanging out at Springs with friends.

Hailing from the city of Greenville, S.C., Sloan is a math major with a minor in secondary education. Once she graduates from PC, Rachel hopes to teach algebra on the secondary level, preferably grades 9-12. She also would like to coach basketball.

During her years at PC, Sloan has been involved in many activities and organizations around campus including SGA, the Multicultural Student Union (MSU), for which she currently serves as president, Delta Sigma Theta sorority and residence life where she has worked as a resident assistant.

Rachel has also been a member of the women's basketball team for the past 3 years, and this year she is a co-captain.

Sloan listed being a member of the basketball team and a leader in MSU as two of her biggest accomplishments at PC.

I am proud of being a member of the basketball team and I am extremely proud to be the president of MSU," she said. "It makes me happy to know that students at PC look up to me as a leader."

During Sloan's last year at PC, she hopes to manage her time as wisely as possible with everything she is in-involved with this year and to be successful at everything she does.

As she gets ready to leave PC and venture off into the "real world," the thing Sloan will miss the most about PC will be the people that sincerely care about her. Least on the list will be all the math tests for her major and pre-season conditioning for basketball.

According to her friend and sorority sister Tanisha Jenkins, Sloan works hard to be the best she can be. "Rachel is a very humble person and does not like to take credit for what she does," Jenkins said. "She works as hard as she can to excel in everything that she does."

Sloan said that the most powerful lesson she has learned in her years at PC is that "there is always a blessing in the storms that pass through your life, so hold on, because help is on the way!"

Rachel also offered these words of wisdom for the freshman class: "No matter how bad things seem, somewhere, somebody, is worse off than you. So be proud of who you are and what you have."

GDH GM Halcombe makes PC eat well, brings transformation

by Ginny Hrushka
Staff Writer

A dramatic transformation took place in GDH over the summer. "It's a lot better than last year," junior Tres Dawkins said. "I've been going back for second and third plates."

Jim Halcombe, the general manager of PC food service, is one of the primary people responsible for Dawkins' return trips through the line.

Halcombe was hired to help with the re-opening of GDH due to his experience in food services. He graduated from Berea College specializing in food service. Halcombe then worked with Marriott for nineteen years before coming to PC.

In a short time, Halcombe has earned the respect of the PC community.

"He's a very nice gentleman. He works very cooperatively with the office," Martha Anne Green, associate dean of students, said. "He is always willing to do whatever he can."

Halcombe is also respected by his co-workers. "He's wonderful to work with, very understanding and fun, and really knows what he is doing," co-worker Diane Watson said.

Halcombe is well-respected not only because of his pleasant disposition but also because of his involvement in student activities. Often he and PC food services work hand in hand with sororities, fraternities and athletics hoping to provide PC students with the best experiences possible.

Halcombe's willingness to do all that he can was especially evident in his role in implementing the changes that have come to GDH and to Springs.

He describes his job as "behind the scenes", wanting to support student activities as much as possible.

Halcombe learned about PC from a previous PC graduate, who told Halcombe how wonderful PC was.

Halcombe agreed with this person, saying, "I like how PC is well-respected and how PC is a good institution for learning."

Halcombe thoroughly enjoys working with PC and wants to help in every way possible.

The renovations and new menu items in GDH will continue this year. Halcombe plans to add "A Taste Of Change", which will be a side cart near the salad bar that will have a different food every lunch time.

For example, one day it would have french fries, where the next day it would have baked potatoes. So far these changes implemented by Halcombe and the rest of the GDH staff have been well-net by the student body.

"There's definitely a lot more variety," junior Kristen Henderson said.

After tough outing, volleyball team falls to 6-6

by Scott Moore
Staff Writer

At the Armstrong Atlantic State University Pirate Classic, on Saturday, September 9, 2000, the Lady Blue Hose Volleyball team had the chance to improve their 6-4 record for the season; however, that opportunity dimmed as the day proceeded.

The team attempted to improve their record in two toilsome matches, however, both ended in losses.

Their first loss of the day came in their opening match, as they fell to Florida Tech, 15-5, 15-2, 8-15, 15-11.

The Lady Blue Hose fought hard as Arisha Walker, junior, lead PC with nine kills.

Eight more kills were added by Debbie Tamosaitis, freshman, who also had 14 digs.

The Lady Blue Hose also mounted 12 blocks from Kati Scott, junior, and Lindsay Mitchell, freshman.

Freshman setters Jessica Maisch and Kellie Haire also contributed to the match as each mounted 14 digs along with seven and sixteen assists, respectively.

Tamosaitis and junior Merrill Wood also aided the Lady Blue Hose in digs with 14 and 10, respectively.

In their second match the Lady Blue Hose lost to St. Leo University, who knocked PC out of St. Leo's Shootout earlier in the season.

Once again the Lions of St. Leo proved fatal to the Lady Blue Hose team as they clipped the Lady Blue Hose 15-12, 15-5, and 15-8.

PC was again led by Tamosaitis and Walker with 16 combined kills. Maish and Haire managed to eke out 18 assists and Scott led the Lady Blue Hose with three blocks.

Saturday's defeats leaves PC presently with a record of 6-6 overall.

The Lady Blue Hose were scheduled to play USC-Aiken on September 12, and at Mars Hill College on September 14; however, as of press time no scores or statistics were available.

Stadium constructing its way to finish, high expectations await it

by Jack Carmody
Sports Editor

The days of being able to watch Blue Hose football at Bailey Memorial Stadium are numbered.

A major part of PC's 10-year Strategic Plan is the new football stadium. These new plans are very quickly turning into reality.

PC's Advancement Office has just announced the beginning of the fund raising stage of the project. The first part of the fund raising consists of the quiet phase. This phase involves the Advancement Office approaching the bigger donors, in hopes of getting contributions. After this phase is completed, the public phase of the fundraising will begin, hopefully by this spring.

The total cost involved in the completion of the stadium is estimated to be $8.5 million. This cost, however, includes a substantial endowment. This endowment will be used for any maintenance issues that come up. All new buildings on campus, including the new soccer stadium that is nearing completion, will have endowments. The idea behind these endowments is for buildings never to get run down, because there will always be money available to repair them.

The new football stadium will be fairly larger than the current football stadium. Bailey Memorial Stadium currently has seating for 5,000 people. The new stadium will be able to seat 5,500 in the grandstand and 2,000 on the visitors side. The grandstand will be brick, so that it will blend in with the campus architecture.

"I think our new stadium will be one of the best in Division II, and be comparable for Division I-AA," said athletics director Valerie Sheley.

The site for the new stadium is also different than that of the old one. The new one will be constructed behind the baseball complex, on the northeast corner of campus. There are several reasons for this move.

The plot of land that Bailey Memorial Stadium is occupying would be too small for the new building. The new site will allow for better access to the stadium, and will also help alleviate most of the current parking problems. Moving the site will also reduce the noise level of the area, which has bothered some of the Clinton residents. Tearing down Bailey Memorial Stadium will allow other buildings to be built in its place. The building of new dorms and new academic buildings and the expansion of Springs Campus center in its place are all being discussed.

The new stadium will not be used just for football season. The training and locker rooms will be made available to the baseball team during their season. A running track is also being planned inside the stadium, in hopes of attracting such venues as the Special Olympics and track meets to PC. Bringing their events on campus will help recruiting, both athletically and academically, by exposing more people to PC.

If fundraising goes as planned, groundbreaking for the stadium will occur sometime this summer, with the stadium being ready hopefully by 2002.

Improv Comedy Trio cheered by PC audience

by Skye Earls
Design Editor

After their debut last year at PC, tickets were very hard to get a hold of this year to the CEP event of improvisational comedy performed by "The Have Nots." The group performed September 7th and 8th in Caldwell Harper Theater at 7:30pm. Both performances sold out.

"It was very funny and I enjoyed it," sophomore Joe Carrero said. "It was my first time seeing improv and I was very impressed with it."

Professor and student alike both seem to relish the show, proving the wide appeal of the improv group.

"I like them because they do a good job and they're really nice people," Lesley Preston, associate professor of drama, said. "I like our students to interact with theatre people who are good people because it makes for good role models, and is an enriching experience."

In discussion with the Have Nots, one of the members Timmy Finch discussed what exactly a good audience is.

"A good audience is one that wishes to challenge the performers with difficult situations and suggestions with the boundaries of good taste i.e., potty humor," Finch said.

Another member, Brandy Rucker, found the PC crowd to fit to this description:

"They (the PC crowd) are definitely a good audience. They didn't go straight for the gutter, so we were able to do more interesting scenes that didn't all revolve around sex and the bathroom," Rucker said.

One discussion floating around PC, is whether or not the school could move the improv performance to a bigger theatre so more people could go, or have the group come more often through the year. On this subject, the third member of The Have Nots expressed his preference.

"Proscenium staging [is] where the audience can see the stage floor," Greg Tavares said. "The audience size for me is preferable around 80 to 120."

The Have Nots also gave workshops at PC on that Thursday and Friday at 2pm that was open to anyone interested.

"Workshops offer us the opportunity to reach ourselves the basics of improv as we share them with others and their excitement for the art form feeds ours," Finch said.

Many people wonder, and asked during the workshops, how the group went about rehearsing since improv is spontaneous.

"We basically live with each other on the road so we have a great deal of time to talk and come up with new ideas," Rucker said. We don't really rehearse. We try new things on stage all the time so I guess that's how we rehearse new ideas."

Some students were interested in getting involved in improv and were asking how they should go about doing so.

"Go see shows, take workshops and then bite the bullet and do a show of your own," Finch said. "You might take a few hits, but it's all worth it."

One job appeal stuck out as what Tavares liked doing best.

"I really like the idea of being forced to make a situation happen anywhere in America and still succeed at making people laugh," he said.

"I think that being friends has a lot to do with our chemistry. We've been through a lot together on and off the stage (no love connections) and after 525 shows, we've developed an unspoken understanding of each other on stage," Rucker said. "But I must say that the chemistry has been there since the beginning, so we're lucky."

As a CEP, The Have Nots have shown that they have a lot, when it comes to pleasing the PC audience.

"It is a non-threatening way to be introduced to theatre and have fun, as well as realize that CEPs can be fun," Preston said.

When asked how the experience of performing at PC could be made more enjoyable for the group, Finch had a suggestion.

"Invite us back," he said.

Homecoming 2000: Blue Hose, Eagles rematch

by Jack Carmody
Sports Editor

Tomorrow PC will take on the Eagles of Carson-Newman in a much anticipated rematch. Carson-Newman once again enters as the #1 ranked Division II football team in the nation, while PC is coming off a 27-14 loss to Catawba two weeks ago. In addition, it is also homecoming weekend.

"The game should provide a fun atmosphere for both the players and the fans," said head football coach Daryl Dickey. "Anytime you go up against the top team in the nation, it's going to be exciting."

In last year's game, PC overcame a 21-16 halftime deficit to take the lead 40-35 with 4:08 to go in the game. However, a 95-yard Carson-Newman touchdown run ended any hopes of a PC victory. PC lost the heartbreaker, 43-40.

"We gained a lot of confidence from last year's game," said coach Dickey. "We know that we can play with [Carson-Newman]."

Carson-Newman has several strengths that PC needs to shut down to be effective. They are a very big team on defense.

"[Carson-Newman has] a lot of size on defense," said offensive lineman Antonio Brown. "They also have very good defensive schemes and are well coached."

The Carson-Newman offense has a lot of variety to it. "They like to run the option on offense," said junior defensive tackle Keon Lallier. "It is very quick hitting and keeps the defense off guard."

For PC, being able to run the ball on offense in order to keep the defense off the field will be very important. Carson-Newman is famous for its fourth quarter comebacks, so winning the fourth quarter is a must.

On Saturday, September 23, PC traveled to Salisbury, N.C. to take on the sixth-ranked Catawba Indians. PC lost with a valiant effort, by a score of 27-14.

The game started off well for PC. The Indians drove the ball down to the PC one yard line, only to tumble the ball away. PC had little success on their first drive, as the Catawba defense forced quarterback Todd Cunningham to ground the ball in the endzone, resulting in a safety. On PC's next possession, a Cunningham pass was intercepted by Catawba's Todd McComb. Catawba, with minutes to go in the first quarter and with the two point conversion, led the game 10-0.

The second quarter saw Catawba add another field goal, increasing their lead to 13-0. PC tried to break through on the scoreboard in the last play of the first half, but John Redding's field goal attempt was blocked. PC's defense held in the third quarter, holding Catawba scoreless.

PC scored in the beginning of the fourth quarter, with a 54-yard pass from Cunningham to Di Young. PC missed the extra point, making the score 13-6. Half way through the fourth quarter, Catawba scored again, making it 20-6. Then, with 3:06 to go in the game, Cunningham ran the ball on a keeper for an 11-yard touchdown. The two point conversion was successful, leading to the final score of 27-14.

"We weren't as consistent as we could have been," said Ben Creaman, who led the Blue Hose in total tackles. "I think we did at times show flashes of what we are capable of."

Active recycling program is a must for PC

by Susan Freeman
Staff Writer

Senior Amy Cooper, senior Susannah Miller and sophomore Emily Arnold are among many people at PC who are trying to build up an active recycling program at PC.

All three are members of Students for Environmental Education (SEE), a program sponsored by the biology department. The group is advised by Dr. John Inman, professor of biology.

Arnold stated that last year she personally collected all of her suite's recycling and took it home. She got labeled a Recycling Guru by her roommates, but she didn't care. She grew up in the home of an environmentalist, so recycling is just a way of life for her. Now she has all of the recycling for Carol International House in her room and car, which she will again take home.

"I have felt since last year we need to do something about recycling," said Arnold. "It makes sense for a top-notch school to have an active recycling program."

Arnold eventually heard about SEE and its efforts to promote recycling on campus.

These efforts have included aluminum can collection, paper collection in Springs Campus Center and now cardboard boxes that have been set up in each dorm.

The problem that SEE has run into with these well-intended programs is that there is nowhere in Laurens County for these collections to go. Maintenance had no choice but to throw away all the paper that was collected in Springs because it was a fire hazard, and it is not part of their job to handle recycling on campus. The cardboard boxes in halls have also been thrown out because they were deteriorating.

Arnold, Miller and Cooper are not daunted by these failures. They are inspired.

"There is a lot of interest," says Miller, vice president of SEE. "We need to come together."

Cooper, president of SEE, has a goal of creating something permanent on-campus which will be here after she leaves.

These three members of SEE and Inman are laying definite groundwork.

Staff Editorial

Changes for "The Blue Stocking" not done yet

by The Editorial Staff

Much like the ladies of GDH, your student newspaper has lost some of its blue.

In the place of that color, however, we the editors hope that you the readers have found something new that draws your interest.

By now you have realized some of the new changes to "The Blue Stocking." We have a new design for editorials, sports and features. We have added an editor's column and introduced cartoons to the newspaper pages, a concept never before seen in the annals of "The Blue Stocking" history (at least not in the past four years). Of course, the "piece de resistance" is the brand new front page design, in all of its garnet glory, complete with a picture of Neville Hall, the center of PC academic life. (Just look at the College's stationary, if you don't believe that.)

By varying our design and improving our overall "look," the editorial staff is hoping that the newspaper will gain a higher level of "reader friendliness" than it has had in the past. Soon, we will even have "The Blue Stocking" on-line. Other changes that the members of the staff have set as goals are increasing the number of pages in the newspaper from eight to twelve and adding an "Arts and Culture" section that would feature reviews of current books, movies, cd's and CEI's.

But change cannot be limited to mere visuals and image. A newspaper that serves as mere "eyecandy" might be entertaining, but it is most likely not informative or instructive. If change is to be profound, it must also come in the form of the newspaper's content, not just its structure.

Hopefully, "The Blue Stocking" staff has made strides in this area by offering balanced and coherent stories that students care about. Still, there is always room to grow in the area of content.

If you look in the box at the bottom of this page, you will find that "The Blue Stocking's" purpose is to serve as a forum for student debate and opinions. To that purpose we would add that such debate must be conducted in the service of the truth. The only way for the newspaper to fulfill such an investigation of truth is for students to express their concerns to us.

Although the editorial staff and staff writers put together "The Blue Stocking," this publication is not the editors' or writers' newspaper. It is the students' newspaper.

As a PC student, the newspaper belongs to you. It can be a tool for expression of your joys and your concerns. It can be an instrument for change and for seeking what is best for PC.

"The Blue Stocking" also offers the same opportunity for expression to the administrative, faculty and staff members of this community.

Have you got a problem with the way something is done on campus? Let "The Blue Stocking" know about it. Write a letter to the editor or submit an idea for a story, and the staff will work with you to ensure that your voice and your concerns are heard by the entire student body.

So please, let us know what you think of the changes both to "The Blue Stocking" and to the campus. And if you don't like what you see in the newspaper, let us know that, too. We are not afraid of opinions that differ from our own. It is through the exchange of ideas that we truly find out who we are and what we believe.

Evans takes a bite out of the 'Big Apple'

"New York, New York big city of dreams. But everything in New York ain't always what it seems." -"Grand Master Flash"

I have always been a fan of nsk taking. When opportunities jump out at me, I like to seize them with two hands and no brains.

When asked by Dr. Greg Henley if I was interested in a week in New York City made financially possible thanks to the Chaplain's Office, I couldnt say "no." All I heard was New York and free. Those words had me sold like a Backstreet Boys ticket. I agreed so hurriedly I forgot to ask any questions regarding what I would be doing, where I would be staying, or who I would be going with. Eventually, informational booklets came in the mail and I found that Rebecca Grau (class of 2000) would be going also.

Though Mommy was still worried about her little boy, I was begging to form a concrete idea of what was going to be happening. The week, which is held every year, is organized by Youth Service and Opportunities Project (YSOP) and is Episcopal in theology, but its purpose is one we should all admire: Rebecca and I were to volunteer at several of Manhattan's more than 1,100 homeless service organizations.

This opportunity was exactly what I needed. Growing up in a capitalist system and learning the principles of "you get what you deserve," I often asked myself why should I help the homeless. Of course they deserve another chance, but they are going to have to clean up their act first. I also remember saying, "here's a dollar to spend on beer, just don't lie and tell me it's for food."

Starting with my first interaction with homeless and elderly men, I was proven that my insights into the lives of the underprivileged was incorrect. The men we prepared dinner and ate with were no different from my own grandpa. We talked about Shaq, Spewell's hair and even religion. One man proved to be a more than adequate theologian. Other days were spent working beside nuns and priests, teenagers and elderly, black and white, all striving to help those who need it. While washing trays at the entrance to a rough soup kitchen in Spanish Harlem, I welcomed a grandmother with her granddaughter, three Italian men that reminded me of the guys that got beat up by the old men on that milk commercial, a woman who stood nearly seven feet tall and reaked of gutters and alleyways and a man with a black plastic bag. I wondered what could be in his bag that was too valuable to leave outside. Probably his treasured recyclables that would put change in his pocket or maybe a change of clothes. I was wrong.

He stood in front of me, bent over and opened his bag which was filled with more than enough milk cartons for everyone in the building. I asked myself, why would anyone with next to nothing give away so much. Of course, the milk would spoil without refrigeration, but that is not the point. The man gave his whole bag. I have a whole house and what do I give? A week of my summer is hardly sufficient.

I could go on to write about how we spent time at a soup kitchen in Brooklyn where the head-honcho let me spray down the sidewalk like they do on "Seinfeld," or how he agreed to my request of letting us climb on the roof or how our co-volunteers were mentally handicapped high school students, proving to me that there is no real excuse not to do something. I could also write about how seized counterfeit clothing is processed and redistributed to the homeless, how Mayor Giuliani really cleaned up Times Square, how nobody checks ID's in bars because police have more pressing matters to attend to, how my Fubu watch that I bought in China Town broke, what the Blue Note is like, how liberal Episcopal sermons can be, how many church doors are wide open to the homeless, how homosexuals can make great strides to better a church if we would only let them, how the "meanest" city in America does extremely kind things or how much more it costs to support a prisoner than to support a homeless person. I could write pages on each of these subjects and I would be happy to discuss any of them if you ask me, but instead I will talk about the subway.

I was riding the subway by myself, and the typical New York Italian man sits near me. I said, "Hello," he asked, "So what's going on?" I said "Nothing," he responded, "Then make it happen." Then he got up and left, leaving me with his wisdom. I realize that nothing will ever change unless we "make it happen." People don't get fed if no one feeds them. Children don't get better if no one loves them. Change will not happen if no one does anything. If I continue to do my own thing, live my own life, I am only adding to the problem.

Jesus wasn't just great because he lived a sinless life. Jesus is still great because his selfless acts of living for others can live through us. Changes need to be made to this world. I often felt like one grain of sand on a glorious beach of dogooders, but I realized I was much more like a grain of sand in a sand bag, holding back a flood of injustice that we can't hold back forever. Help when you can and remember change isn't that bad.

(End note: Thanks Greg, for a great opportunity and guidance)

My Turn
Joe Evans

Off the Record
Ben Acton

I remember the first time I traveled home from PC. It was for fall break my freshman year, and I was excited to be getting a few days off from school. You see, I was not the intrepid reporter and editor then that I am now. My first half semester at PC had not been what I would call fun. Classes had gone well (In fact, Dr. Skinner's English 201 seemed to come right out of "Dead Poet's Society," an impression I have that will probably make him cringe,) but, due to my shyness and social awkwardness, I had not made any real friends. Not having friends at college was, for me, like not having pepperoni on your pizza—you can taste the cheese and the sauce and have a good meal, but there's no meat to it. (My apologies to the vegetarians in the audience.)

Thus, I was ecstatic to be racing down I-85 to "Hot-lanta" and then hanging a right on I-20 to the land of Ham-Birmingham, Alabama, to be exact. As I neared the end of the five and a half hour trip, I started playing a tape of the songs that reminded me of home: Don MacLean's "American Pie," which had been my best friend's and my favorite song in high school; Eric Clapton's "Change the World," which had been a shared memory between me and a girl that, at the time, I missed deeply; and Lynard Skynard's "Sweet Home Alabama," which needs no further explanation.

I pulled into my mom's driveway, the stereo blaring, thankful to be home. The weekend was filled with hot home-cooked food (remember, GDH was not then what it is now), stories of PC life, reunions with friends (including the best friend and the girl and her new boyfriend) and other times of great comfort and solace to me. In all my other visits home, none compare to the emotion I felt at my very first "homecoming."

As we prepare for PC's Homecoming 2000, I cannot help but think how much PC and I have changed since the fall of 1997. Classes are still going well (In fact, Dr. Baker's Ethics class now feels like a Socratic dialogue, an impression I have which might garner me bonus points). And after four years I can now say I have found some of the best and truest friends I am ever likely to find again. I have found a purpose and a calling. I have found love in a profound and meaningful way. I have found a home.

But still, I wonder how many students currently feel the same way a lonely freshman from Birmingham, Alabama, did years ago. How many students have yet to find a true friend, a purpose, a love, a home? How many students just consider PC a stop a long the way (and perhaps not a terribly pleasant one at that) to bigger and better things and don't feel that this place of "dum vivimus, servimus" is a place to hang your hat, sit by the hearth and eat a home-cooked meal. I think there might be a number of students who feel this way—just look at the number of empty parking spaces on the weekends or the number of transfers we have each year.

Unfortunately, these incidents have no easy solutions. The sad fact of the matter is that PC is not the only institution of higher education that sometimes loses the members of its community without ever really knowing what is lost.

On this day before homecoming maybe all we can do is to welcome our graduates, our family, back home with a smile and open arms, to not take for granted those friends who still remain and to remember and pray for those who have made their home at PC for a little while, but whose impact will last a lifetime.

Recycling,

The Improvements Committee of SGA has recycling on its agenda for the year. The group has reviewed many failed proposals from years past.

"All of these proposals have been written, [but] with no action," Arnold emphasized. "We need to act on a proposal, whether it's free or we have to pay for it."

The group has taken many steps of action so far. While sifting through piles of the old recycling proposals, Cooper and Miller came across an advertisement from 1995 for a product called Protainers (TM). This company makes bins in which to store recycling. After a quick call to the Protainers headquarters in Minnesota, SEE began a new plan. The company makes small containers which are the perfect size for dorms, houses, and offices on-campus. SEE has already applied to the Student Government Finance Committee in hopes of getting assistance in this endeavor.

They have also sent a proposal to The Department of Health and Environmental Control (DHEC) for financial assistance. Morris Galloway, vice president of Finance and Administration, has also been working to see what he can do to help further SEE's plan of replacing the cardboard boxes with durable plastic containers.

"Protainers are relatively expensive," Cooper asserted, "but it will be official, for recycling, and not confused for trashcans. Protainers are permanent."

Of course, plans aren't successful unless everyone is participating. Cooper and Miller, who are also recycling in their room for their entire hall, state that recycling is an easy thing to do. They compare it to driving a car—once a person learns how and gets used to recycling, it becomes a natural habit that does not require much thought or strain.

"The underlying idea here is this is an easy way to start something that can easily be added on to," Cooper said. "It'll reduce waste. It'll reduce the cost of trash pick-up."

The three women have many ideas to promote recycling on-campus. SGA wants to have an aluminum can drive in which everyone writes his or her name on their can(s). A can will be drawn from the pile, and the winner gets the monetary value of the cans.

"The money from the cans could be a good source of income for college students," Miller said.

SEE has been confronted with the two extreme issues of laziness and proper handling of the recyclables.

A lot of people simply don't recycle because it is easier to just throw things away. Others are skeptical that the paper and containers they place in bins is not actually going to be recycled.

Another issue concerns the handling of these items.

Arnold also found out the reason PC does not have a recycling plan handled by waste management is because of the lack of interest in the community.

In order for PC to have its recycling handled, five or six other businesses in the community would have to agree to go in with PC to participate in a recycling collection program. Such interest has never been expressed.

to be done," said Galloway.

These things include replacing the library door with a door opener. Galloway stated that the old door needed to be taken out anyway, so while they were doing things, why not go an extra step?

Freshman Ryan Jennings is PC's only student in a mobile chair, however, he's not the only one with a disability. Even though the process of PC's improvements were sped up a little by Jennings attending this year, they weren't done just because of his arrival. In fact, only a few years ago, a SEE has set up Recycling bins like this one in Smythe and CIH.

Until that time, SEE will do its best to take recyclables to other counties that have recycling facilities.

The active members, which vary in number from 10 to 25 students, will collect the items.

Miller stated that junior Will Shelbourne has volunteered to drive a big truckload of the recyclables.

"There is a lot of interest [in recycling] all over campus," said Cooper. "Fraternity Court wants to be in on it. Robbie Bryan is handling recycling out at the townhouses. Admin wants to be involved, too."

Arnold thinks that a job could be created to handle the recycling.

"If it were an actual job, recycling would be taken more seriously than it would on a volunteer basis," she said.

Miller and Cooper said the plans for the new science building include a recycling center.

Cooper feels PC is behind in educating its students about recycling and its importance.

"We need to learn these habits and carry them out into the world," said Cooper. "It needs to be just another aspect of a PC education."

Miller and Cooper are open to any suggestions anyone might have.

"It would be neat to have a convocation on recycling," Cooper said.

Miller, Arnold, and Cooper are very excited about the future of recycling at PC. They feel it is a very vital part of the curriculum of the PC education.

"It's a responsibility we all have," Arnold said.

Improvements made to accomodate handicapped

by Maura Connelly
Staff Writer

Many students may have recognized the new buildings and new additions to old buildings that PC has developed over the summer, but such changes are not as abrupt as they seem. The fact is that the changes are really just improvements.

One of the biggest improvements is in handicap accessibility.

"Handicap accessibility is a huge issue," stated Mr. Morris Galloway, PC's vice president of finance and administration.

PC tackled this issue full force this summer in a variety of ways. For instance, new ramps were put in, and some of the old ones were replaced. Some of the improvements made were done simply because they needed to be taken care of.

"We did some things that needed lift was added to the Douglas House to accommodate a student living there.

"We had a budget," Galloway said. "We made changes where we could."

A maintenance crew came in and made "curve cuts," trying to keep in mind how PC might better serve any student, faculty or staff member with a disability.

Included in the "curve cuts" was also a project to smooth out the sidewalks. This is helpful to individuals with vi-improvements that have been made to the school, and also to his room. The bathroom was made handicap accessible, and the door was enlarged. There was also an emergency pull cord added to his room. So far, it has only been used once, and that was by accident by his roommate, Ron.

Jennings said that the only buildings he has trouble getting around in are Belk and Clinton, because those buildings do not have elevators.

According to Title III of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1991, all private schools should have acceptable facilities to access the buildings. With its physical plan improvements it seems as though PC's administration has taken care of the requirements for this law.

As for Jennings not being able to get upstairs in Clinton and Belk, there's not too much to be said about that. However, there has been word that the girls will come downstairs to see him.

Braden stresses there is a lot more to PC than books

by Tara Sluder
Assignments Editor

A familiar name and smiling face at PC belong to Zach Braden, a senior from Covington, Georgia. If you don't know who he is, you've probably seen him in Springs, where he says he "waste[s] a lot of time on the Ping-Pong table."

Ping-Pong, however, is only a small part of Braden's active life at PC; he is involved on every end of campus.

Braden is the co-captain of the men's cross country team. He's made first team all conference for the past two years. His hope for this year is to win conference, place in the regionals and go on to nationals.

Cross country coach Leigh Irwin recognizes Braden as a major contributor and leader to the team.

"Zach is definitely one of our strongest leaders," Irwin said. "Our program has made major strides, and Zach's commitment, leadership and enthusiasm has been huge. He is constantly pushing the other runners to improve."

Braden is also involved in Judicial Council, SGA, Theta Chi, SVS and Stirlings, among other things. His favorite things about PC, however, are the friendships he has developed.

"When I came here, I was really shy," Braden said. "PC has made me grow up a lot. I've met so many people, and I know that these are my true friends."

When asked what he will miss the most about PC, his answer was the same: friends.

"I will miss the friendships I've Braden hopes to leave PC better than when he arrived.

made," he said. "I'll miss the ability to walk down the hall and have anyone to talk to. I have a different life here. When I'm not here, I feel like a totally different person. Here there is no norm, but in other places there is a norm."

Braden is a biology major and a chemistry minor. The most challenging thing about PC to him is the academic aspect.

"I've got to study all the time just to keep up with all of my activities and responsibilities," he said.

Since Braden started attending PC there have been a number of changes around campus. One change occurred after his freshman year when Dr. Griffith stepped in as President.

"When I got here as a freshman, it seemed hard to get in a certain group," Braden said. "Now there's more interaction between everyone on campus. I believe Dr. Griffith had a big impact on that. He came in with a new attitude and new plans."

After graduating, Braden hopes to get accepted to medical school and go on from there. His number one ambition is to be a doctor. Before medical school, however, he would like to spend the summer traveling out west.

As for the remainder of his senior year, Braden's goal other than making nationals for cross country is to finish off strong what he started as a freshman.

"I'd like to leave PC in the best shape possible, hoping that I had something to do with it," he said.

Braden urges students to enjoy the time they have left at PC and to maintain those friendships made here.

"Have fun—it only lasts four years," Braden said. "Enjoy it. Don't screw up, but don't waste all of your time in the library. There is a lot more to PC than books."

Masson's job excites because it's new to PC and new to her

by John Catoe
Staff Writer

Susan Masson has had a long and laborious route to becoming the coordinator of programs at Carol International House, a resident director, and coordinator of student study abroad programs at PC.

Masson's road to PC began in New Orleans, La. She left "The Big Easy" for Memphis, Tenn., where she received her undergraduate's degree in English from Rhodes College. From there she moved to London, England to work for five months. She crossed back "over the pond" and resided in Austin, Tex., for two years. She then she came to the University of South Carolina (USC) and now works for PC.

Masson was recruited for PC through USC's graduate program. Masson daily commutes to USC where she is studying higher education and administration. Despite the commute from Clinton to Columbia, Masson was drawn to PC because of the opportunity to work with study abroad programs. CIH was a welcomed surprise that was given to her last year, and the responsibility of coordinating study abroad programs is new to her this year.

"So much [of my job] is exciting because it's new to PC and new to me," Masson said, reflecting on her experience at PC thus far.

Masson is very happy with the direction CIH has gone and is heading.

"It's my job to get the residents involved and to have the rest of the PC community involved as well," Masson said.

Masson credits the residents of CIH as a big help to her.

"To have the opportunity to do so many things is exciting," she said about the possibilities of CIH.

According to sophomore Patrick Riley, one of the CIH residents, the feeling is mutual.

"She's done a good job," Riley said of Masson. "She's worked for the residents [by] providing furniture and making sure maintenance requests are met. She's done well with the transition and with the programming in CIH."

In addition, the weight of coordinating student's study abroad programs, a duty added to Masson this year, does not come as a burden.

"It's fun to see so many students get interested in the international scene," Masson said of her new responsibility.

Masson wishes to have a successful year with CIH. In the future Masson looks forward to traveling abroad as a Rotary scholar, desires to work overseas again, and does not rule out the possibility of getting a Ph. D. in intercultural studies.

Cross country earns first ever regional rankings

by Jack Carmody
Sports Editor

"So, PC's got a cross country team this year" many students comment.

Actually, PC has had a cross country program for three years. But it has not been until this season that people have started to take notice.

Both the men's and women's teams entered the season with many new faces, as well as some familiar ones. The guys are led by senior captains Zach Braden, Brian James, and Jonathan Todd. Also returning from last year's squad are sophomores Tim Bessey and Josh Terrell. Sophomore Jack Carmody is also back after a stress fracture that kept him out of competition last season. There are several newcomers. Junior Thomas German joins a freshman freshman class that includes Lee Bugay, Drew English, Ryan Nobles and Justin Vosburgh.

The returners for the women are captains Heather Sherer and Alison Outz. First year runner Katie Lenhart is the lone sophomore. The girls also have a strong group of freshmen runners that include Tanith Forrester, Sara Harris and Grace Mitchell.

The women are, however, at a disadvantage, due to their having only 6 runners, one above the minimum.

PC made a statement in their first race of the year, the Lander Invitational. The girls took home a first place trophy for the first time in program history, while the boys finished second.

Forrester took second in the women's 5K race, with a time of 20:31. Forrester led the whole race and probably would have won had it not been for a badly marked course. Lenhart finished sixth, with a time of 21:14, followed by Mitchell and Outz, who finished seventh and eighth respectively. Sherer finished tenth in a time of 22:47. Braden had the top finish for PC in the 8K race, placing fourth with a time of 28:08. English ran a 28:54, good for sixth place. German, Carmody, and Bugay all placed in the top 25.

The next week brought even more success. Both the men's and women's team won the Lenior-Rhyne Invitational. For the women, it was their second victory in a row while the men barely edged out Catawba for their first win in team history.

Forrester won the women's race, with a time of 19:46. Lenhart again finished fourth, running a 20:50. Captains Outz and Sherer ran 21:28 and 22:25 respectively, while Harris ran a 22:33. All five girls placed in the top 15. Mitchell did not run in the race due to a sore ankle.

The men's team was once again led by Braden, who won the race with a time of 26:45. English finished third, running a 27:22. Carmody placed eleventh, with a time of 29:06, with German only one second behind. Bugay placed twentieth, with a time of 29:55.

The Land of the Sky Invitational presented PC with its biggest challenge of the season to that point. The race featured thirteen teams, and a very hilly course. Both teams finished 4th in the meet.

Forrester was fourth in the women's race, with a time of 21:39. Lenhart was eighteenth, running a 21:53. Outz placed twenty-third, with Mitchell right behind.

Braden finished eighth in the men's race, in time of 30:01. English was three places behind, with a time of 30:46. German was twenty-fifth in a time of 32:40. Bugay and Nobles finished thirty-first and forty-ninth respectively.

PC's performance in the first half of the season helped them earn their first ever regional rankings.

As of September 23, the women are ranked fourth, and the men, seventh in the southeast region.

"This year has been a complete turnaround for cross country here at PC," said head coach Leigh Irwin. "I am especially excited for our senior captains who have been involved in the program for a while."

The team's next race is October 19 at Erskine College.

PC Golf pushes to strive on the green and in the classroom

by Matthew O'Leary
Staff Writer

"He stresses being a student-athlete," said senior golf team member Jay Biber of Coach Tommy Addison.

After going to the regionals seven times in a row, Addison is ready to bring the team back, and even further.

According to Addison, the 2000-2001 golf team looks strong.

"They're an extremely talented team," said. There are three sophomores, one junior, and four returning seniors: Jay Biber, Tommy Addison III, Andrew Garner, and Jon Sjoström. In addition, there are four freshmen from the Carolinas to back them up.

On the team there are four all-conference players. Biber is actually an all-American player. And on top of all this, last year the team was in the top twenty-five in the nation.

The 2000 season consists of 10 regular tournaments. Five of these are held in the fall, from September to November. The other five are held from February to mid-April, in the spring. The last spring tourney is the South Atlantic Conference and is held in Clinton. Five players play in each tournament, and there are about twelve to fifteen teams vying for the win at once.

The scoring is done in two separate ways. Individual stats are recorded for each player. The team is done differently. The four best scores on the team are added together, and that makes up the team's score.

After the first ten tournaments, fifteen teams move onto the NCAA South Regionals, in late April. If PC can hack it here, which they have a good chance of doing, they will move on to the NCAA Finals with six other teams. The location is to be announced.

Their first game didn't go as well as they had hoped, but still was not a total loss. In the tournament at Mt. Mitchell, they finished 5th. They ended the tournament with a total of 590 points.

Besides the experience factor, the best asset to the team is probably their coach. Tommy Addison is a great coach with a lot of ambition. He pushes his team to strive, but not merely on the green. He helps them focus. Addison describes his technique as "very simple. I teach sticking to the basics and we work very hard on course management."

The Policy Statement for his team states it clearly: "Academics is our highest priority as a student-athlete at Presbyterian College. You are expected and required to be prepared for each class every day."

Addison makes sure that his players are succeeding in school as well, and leaves them time for their social lives, so that their whole lives do not revolve around a dimpled ball. This is considered by some to be one of his greatest attributes as a coach.

And it all seems to be working.

"The Athletic Department at PC is heading in a great direction", said Biber.

Changes proposed in General Education Requirements

Jennifer Rivers
Staff Writer

Presbyterian College has proposed a possible change for the general education requirements in the future. The proposal has three components - the Freshman Experience; portfolio development and the documentation of the communication proficiencies and practicum or intercultural education requirements; and the Senior Capstone. Dr. David Gillespie, Vice President of Academic Affairs and Dean of Faculty, said that the possible change will "add value to a [Presbyterian College] degree."

The Freshman Experience is a one-semester course titled "Introduction to Inquiry." The four credit hour course examines two broad themes, change and discovery, which will be featured biennially. The course will include a significant applied communication component based on one of the themes. The components are writing, information technology and oral presentation. In addition, faculty members of the Introduction to Inquiry courses will serve as advisors, and the class will constitute a Seminar group, gathering for social occasions to discuss events or assignments. The course, furthermore, introduces the role of the portfolio and the student's four-year responsibility for the portfolio's maintenance and development.

The proposal of the portfolio objectives new communication across the curriculum (writing, speech, and information technology) proficiencies and either a practicum or intercultural education requirement for graduation. Other proficiencies include a variety of forms (thesis-based, persuasive, creative), methods (information technology, oral, written, performative) and process (planning, drafting, revising, editing, practicing.) Documentation of the portfolio begins the freshman year and continues throughout the Senior Capstone. By graduation, students must reach the requirement either in practicum or intercultural education. An internship or significant field experience certified by the student's major department completes the practicum requirement. Any two of the

PU discusses diversity

by Leigh Ann Cain
Staff Writer

Last year the PC community took action in dealing with diversity. Dr. Griffith originated the idea of creating a grassroots organization to increase the awareness of this issue. Dr. Booker T. Ingram, political science professor, named it Project Understanding (PU).

On Monday, October 9, the second PU meeting of the year was held in Chapman Conference Center. The organization meets monthly and is made up of students and faculty who want to close the gaps between people of different backgrounds here at PC.

"The purpose of PU is to break down the barriers within the school," sophomore, Emily Arnold, said. "The barriers are very obvious... The only way to truly change is when you are put into a situation to look at the world differently."

College challenged to take recycling seriously

Recently, the newly created Student Government Finance Committee (SGFC) and the Student Senate passed a proposal that will allow the Students for Environmental Education (SEE) to purchase new recycling bins for aluminum cans. Enough money was given to place a bin in every building on campus; however, SEE will pay for delivery of the bins out of their budget. Money received from recycling will then go back into SEE's budget to cover these costs.

While we at "The Blue Stocking" believe purchasing recycling bins is an extremely worthwhile project and a good use of the funds available to the SGFC, we cannot help but wonder why SEE had to use student activities money and its own budget to complete a project the College should already be undertaking.

One of the purposes of the College, as outlined on the back cover of "The Knapsack" and on its website, is "To foster in students an appreciation of, and concern for, the environment and natural resources."

Students should not have to spend an activities fee and their own programming budgets to fulfill an objective that PC says it will fulfill for students. By making the SEE do just that, a lesser appreciation of the environment and a lesser amount of recycling will go on. Instead of using the SGFC's funds to broaden a recycling program to include plastic and paper, SEE can only start a program for recycling cans, a program that the College itself should be concerned with.

The question then, is it fostering a concern for the environment is a purpose of the College, why is the College not putting up the money to get the recycling bins on campus?

One answer may be that students are ahead of administrators in recognizing the needs of the community and in attempting to address those needs. In addition, maybe the only money available to buy the bins is the money at the SGFC's disposal.

However, it still seems odd that even with capital campaigns designed to raise millions with a budget surplus, the College cannot find $2,000 to facilitate one of their primary purposes. Simply put, it might just be time for PC to put its money where its mouth is.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

On behalf of the Student Union Board, I would like to extend a wholehearted thank you to the PC community for the overwhelming display of spirit during Homecoming week.

As the President of the Student Union Board, I watched Mary Lane Quinn, Sara McCue, Sam Mourning, Anna Folks, David Kinman and Walt Constantine work together to bring the students the best Homecoming Presbyterian College has had in a very long time. However, all of SUB's efforts would have been fruitless without the exuberant spirit of the PC student body. The unforgettable week of school spirit is largely due to the students.

On Monday night, for the first time in many years, SUB sponsored a bonfire on the Intramural Field. Despite many doubts that we would have a low turnout, I watched in awe as more than 300 hundred people showed up to support our Blue Hose football team at the kickoff of our Homecoming activities. Throughout the week, many of PC's organizations contributed to the explosion of spirit on our campus. This "explosion" culminated in the tearing down of the goalposts on Saturday after the victory over Carson-Newman.

As I stand at the beginning of my senior year, I reflect back to my days as a freshman and how far PC's spirit has come since then. This year's Homecoming was evidence of the changing times at PC. There is no better way to spend your time here at PC than by being a part of a community that is alive with the PC spirit. It is my hope that this contagious spirit continues throughout this year and into the coming years. Sincerely,

Zeta Lamberson
Student Union Board President

Dear Editor,

We thought that you would like to know that, this morning, a not-so-unusual thing happened, nearly 100 students were turned away from a CEP. We should know. We were two of those who were told that there were no seats left in Edmunds Hall. The same thing happened at last week's alcohol awareness program, too. Is there a new campus policy stating that every CEP must be held in a building that can support only a fraction of the students that wish to attend? Guess we didn't get the memo.

We understand that the music department, for today's CEP, wished to have a "more intimate setting," hence the smaller facility; but it is simply not fair to turn away the students who are dedicated to fulfilling the required number of CEPs. From our understanding, more students need performance CEPs because there are generally more lectures than performances throughout the year. In addition, many performance CEPs require the purchase of a ticket, which many students are not willing or are perhaps unable to do. In response, the music department graciously took it upon themselves to add a free performance CEP to this semester's line-up. Didn't they know that they would have a great turnout? A turnout so much greater than a larger building, say Belk Auditorium, would be needed? And, with everyone involved being so "hush, hush" about it and constantly baring us with phrases like "it's going to be good," did they nothing that there would be adequate interest to fill even Edmunds Hall?

"So maybe you should have gotten there early," one might say. Well, truth be told, one of us was. The other one was coming from a class in Richardson. It was still only five till eleven when we met at the door, but we were turned away.

Does that give students with classes in HP and Neville an advantage? Perhaps, but anyone that has a class running even a minute over is at a disadvantage when it comes to getting there before the doors are shut in their faces.

It comes down to this: the school does a great job at giving us variety and plenty of CEPs to attend each year, but regardless of how many CEPs that are offered, there should be adequate seats for any number of students who wish to attend a particular event. That way students won't feel "punished" for being on top of their CEP requirements, and they won't get discouraged about attending future CEPs if they are unable to get there ten or fifteen minutes early.

CEP's, More than just credit: A Lesson

The "Cultural Enrichment Program" (CEP) is designed to ensure that Presbyterian College students have the broad and rich cultural experience that is addresses students about the pain he has endured. The accident Waddel was in left him with a broken neck. He has to live his life with metal rods jutting from his head in all directions. His speech made me realize that I didn't want to end up paralyzed, dead, or worse - killing an innocent human being. Waddel was able to get his point across to the blank faces that stared at him, including mine - if you choose to drink, please don't drive.

The lecture really touched me because I too have lost someone in an alcohol-related accident. On May 5, 2000, a friend of mine was killed instantly when he hit eight trees on his way home. He had been drinking, but not the excessive amounts that he normally drank.

As I recently learned, CEP events can strike a world of emotions, and it did for me on Tuesday, September 26th. I attended the Alcohol Awareness CEP where Donna Carter and Derek Waddel spoke about drinking and driving. Carter began the event by revealing that she had lost her brother to a drinking and driving accident about ten years ago. As a result of his untimely death, she joined Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) to help teach people of the dangers of combining alcohol and drugs with driving. Her message included the danger of hurting ourselves, as well as hurting unsuspecting and innocent victims. She also showed a video, which introduced families who have lost a relative to drunk driving accidents. The video made me tear up because I've felt the pain of losing someone.

Derek Waddel was the other speaker of the lecture. His story moved me because he got behind the wheel intoxicated, was in a severe accident, and now

His death was so surprising because I saw him thirty minutes before he died. He was in our house chatting about different things. He then died when he hit the first tree in the eight to come. I couldn't believe it. I was so angry with him because he was only nineteen years old! He had his whole life ahead of him. My distinct memory of the worst days of my life was when I saw his parents staring aimlessly at the floor wondering why their precious son was taken away. Ever since I saw that image, I haven't stepped foot in the driver's seat while/during drinking, nor have I gotten in a car where the driver has been intoxicated.

Hopefully, with the right teachings, we can help prevent drunk driving accidents. Losing someone in a drunk driving accident causes so much pain, and I don't want anyone else to go through the pain that I have. So my message is clear - be safe in your decisions regarding alcohol and drugs.

SGA prepares for Parents' Weekend

Exciting progress has been made over the past few months. New members Louisa Hargett and Jessie Bowen have been added to the Junior Class Officers.

Your Student Government Association has also successfully completed some of our goals for the school year, such as adding the student tax machine in Springs Campus Center, student copier in Harrington-Peachtree, state and local newspapers in Greenville-Dinning Hall and Springs, a big screen television in Springs, a drink machine in H-P and many other improvements are going to follow.

Please feel free to place any other suggestions that you might have in the SGA Suggestion Box located on the front desk of the Springs Campus Center.

The Student Senate and Student Government Finance Committee (SGFC) are well underway. Two proposals for additional funds have already been granted to two of our recognized student organizations.

The Students for Environmental Education (SEE) will use the additional funds in order to purchase new recycling bins for the campus community.

The Multicultural Student Union will host a haunted house along with the Alpha Psi Omega Honorary Theater Fraternity on October 30th and 31st for the PC and Clinton community.

MSU plans to purchase the needed supplies with the additional funds granted to them the Student Senate and SGFC.

The SGFC is continuing to receive additional request for funding. Please contact the SGFC Chairperson, TJ Ackery, for additional information on how your recognized group can receive funding.

Now that fall break is over and we are back in classes, let's get ready to welcome our family and friends to the Presbyterian College's 44th Annual Parent's Weekend.

As our parents and friends enjoy the activities that the College has planned for them, be sure to point out the exciting new additions to our campus and encourage them to stop by the SGA Silent Auction in Mabry-Smith Yonce. Enjoy your weekend!

The Bottom Line
Ben Acton

I am Superman. Or, more accurately, for a very brief moment I was Superman.

I have always been fascinated by superheroes, and I have wanted to be one ever since childhood. When I was much younger (think 4 or 5), I always thought that it would be cool to have a super strength, super speed or, best of all, to have the ability to fly. Since none of those powers seemed evident to me, I settled for the next best thing: watching my favorite heroes duke it out every Saturday morning on "Super Friends."

There they all were in one place--Batman, Aqua Man, Wonder Woman and, of course, the Man of Steel. They were everything that I wanted to be, fighting for truth, justice and the American way. I believe that the time would come that I too might fight for those ideals and live up to the models those characters established.

Luckily, fate conspired to give me that change. One night after watching Superman save some helpless citizens trapped underwater, I took my bath. As the tub filled with water, I began to notice that my environment was much like the one that Superman found himself in. Further, my brother, in the tub with me, began to resemble a helpless citizen doomed to a watery grave if I could not impersonate Superman.

So, summoning all my bravery, I climbed onto the edge of the tub, yelled out "Superman!" and dove in. The next sound was screaming--both from my brother and me as my head hit the bottom of the tub and cracked wide open.

Although my head was broken, my belief in heroes was not. I simply had to learn that there were also safer heroes, less flashy maybe, but hardworking, noble and good nonetheless.

To me this weekend is about those kinds of heroes - our parents. In many cases moms and dads are the most real heroes we will ever meet. And this weekend offers a chance to show our heroes how well we have learned the lessons they have shown us.

I know this is true for me. My hero will be on campus today, and I could not be more excited. As much awe as I had for Superman, as much as I wanted to be like him, I have much greater awe for and a much greater desire to imitate a real hero, my mother.

She has never leapt tall buildings in a single bound, but she did make a boy scared out of his mind at being rushed to the emergency room feel a whole lot better. She may not be faster than a speeding bullet, but she has always been willing to slow down and take the time to listen to both of her sons. More powerful than a locomotive? You better believe it. She does what takes real strength-sacrificing herself for others.

So thanks, mom, for being my hero, for teaching me what it means to fight for truth and justice and for encouraging me to grow from a boy into a super man. I am not there yet, but without you as a model, I might still just be dancing on the edge of the tub.

Media, Society class trip to Atlanta proves a practical extension

By Ben Acton, Devon Beissr, Susan Freeman and Jennifer Glenn

Have you ever spent your fall break going to the movies, touring world-famous facilities and attending a rock concert? Now, have you ever done those things over a two day period with classmates, four professors, your very own p.r. man and a bus driver decked out in full cowboy attire?

As participants in the annual course on "Media and Society," 23 PC students, under the guidance of english professors Dr. Jim Skinner and Dr. Terry Barr, philosophy professor Dr. Richard Baker, psychology professor Dr. Eric Johnson, public relations Grant Vosburg and bus driver Bruce, got a chance to tour downtown Atlanta and to take a behind-the-scenes look at how the media of film, newspapers, music, art and television deliver their messages.

According to Skinner, the Atlanta trip is a practical extension of what the students learn in the classroom both before and after fall break.

Activities on the trip included a viewing of the new film "Almost Famous," touring "The Atlanta Constitutional Journal," the CNN center, the High Museum of Art and the television station WSB-Channel 2 and attending a hip-hop concert featuring "The Roots" and "The Okay Players."

After a three-hour bus trip from Clinton to Atlanta on the Thursday prior to fall break, the first item on the agenda was a trip to

Phipps Plaza and a viewing of the film "Almost Famous." The film tells the story of a 15 year old boy who lives out his dream by going on tour with a "rock 'n roll" band and writing of the band's exploits for "Rolling Stone" during the early 1970s, a time commonly thought of as the last true days of "rock 'n roll."

The film dealt with many of the same themes that the students and faculty of "Media and Society" have been studying during the first half of this semester, most notably, the commercialization of the music and the types of messages that different media send.

Members of the Media and Society class and their professors pose outside the High Museum of Art.

Senior Zeta Lamberson disagreed, "It was about real people, that it is cool to be 'uncool'."

Luckily boredom was not given much of a chance to set in the following day as the tours of "The Atlanta Journal Constitution," CNN, High Museum, and WSB-TV and

"The Roots" concert kept everyone on the trip moving. The bus left the hotel at 8:00 am and did not return until almost midnight.

At "The Atlanta Journal Constitution" the class had the chance to talk with reporter Graig Schneider, PC's 6th annual Hammet Award Winner for excellence in journalism and Public Editor George Edwards about how the newspaper has dealt with society's growing demand for entertainment rather than information.

"[Schneider and Edwards] were constantly torn between the good and the bad aspects of the media, the morality in news," said senior Aaron Collier of the discussion. "It's encouraging to see there is a debate over such a thing."

At CNN and WSB, the class got to speak with some PC connections. PC grad and "Media and Society" alum Beth Peake, the youngest producer in the history of CNN, spoke to the class about the rewards and disadvantages of working for CNN.

At WSB-TV, former PC parents John Pruitt, WSB-TV anchor and Steve Smith, an executive for Fox Sports South, also talked about the balance they try to attain in making the news pertinent while at the same time interesting to the viewer.

"We must try to blend professionalism and subjectivity while attracting an audience," Pruitt said of the goals of television broadcast journalism. "[In the process] we are presoners of the public."

The trip to WSB-TV also included the opportunity to see a portion of a live news broadcast.

"It was good for me to be able to see the anchors in person and realize that they are working as hard as everyone else is," said Lamberson.

Although all the activities generated much thought-provoking discussion among the students and faculty, the highlight of the trip was the Friday night concert, which took place at the Tabernacle concert hall near Centennial Park in downtown Atlanta.

The concert, which featured hip-hop artists such as "Dier Dier," "Jaguar," "Dead Prez" and "The Roots" was a new experience for most of the class participants, and although there were some complaints about the loudness of the music, most also seemed to enjoy the experience.

"I've never been to a concert like the Roots before," junior Clay Cappio said. "I liked it a lot."

The concert is the most adventuresome event in the whole trip," said Johnson, who is one of the Seniors Claire Butler and Jennifer Glenn note the displays on their tour of CNN.

Sigma Nu gives back to community through CHAMPS

by Hank Coleman
News Editor

Presbyterian College's Sigma Nu Fraternity has committed itself to helping support the Clinton community's CHAMPS program as part of their philanthropy efforts.

"CHAMPS stands for communities helping, assisting and motivating promising students," said Sigma Nu brother Robbie Bryan.

Bryan said that the program is for disadvantaged youths from Clinton and Laurens between seventh and tenth grades.

"A disadvantaged youth can be almost anything from being disadvantaged because of divorce, financial hard times, mental or physical abuse," said Bryan.

He added that about 13 members of Sigma Nu Fraternity help tutor the children after school and act as mentors to the young men and women in the program.

Sigma Nu also donates $600 a year from their undergraduate members of the fraternity and their alumni to sponsor one child for CHAMPS's annual two week long summer camp held at PC.

"Sigma Nu has committed to sponsoring a child for summer camp for the long term," said Bryan. "The brothers are very devoted to this charity. We have decided to pay for half of the cost, and have our alumni pay for the other half. There are no costs for the child to attend. Everything is provided for them."

Bryan mentioned that teachers from local high schools come to PC during the summer to teach the CHAMPS children classes in mathematics, English, the humanities and Christian Education character.

They also take field trips to local area factories and businesses during the camp. He added that there was a different speaker every night at the camp focusing on real world issues that the children would have to face.

"There was a nutritionist who came to talk to the kids about eating right, a banker to talk about finances and even a guy with mechanical babies to show them how hard it is raising another human being.

Bryan added that he served as a counselor/mentor at the camp this past summer for the kids.

"Basically, I was just a mentor for them and hung out with them in the evenings," said Bryan. "They have a ton of resources in people to help them."

One of the themes for this year's camp was "Tracking the path of success."

"It's a good program that focuses on giving the children the tools and opportunity to succeed in life," said Bryan. "The program wants them to have success in life whether that be going to college, getting a good job or just having the necessary skills needed to work on their family's farm."

Bryan said that there was room for more greeks and non greeks alike to get involved with the CHAMPS program.

"It would be great to have other organizations on campus see CHAMPS as a wonderful service opportunity and support the program," said Bryan. "It's a fun service for the fraternity to do together, and it's great hanging out with the kids and tutoring them."

T.J. Ackerly makes a difference in SGA, around campus

by Ginny Hrushka
staff writer

T.J. Ackerly, from Roswell Georgia, may be a little hard to find due to her busy schedule, but most likely she's working hard in the biology lab. Studying is only a part of Ackerly's life here at PC. Ackerly is involved in a variety of activities, including being the treasurer of SGA.

Ackerly has been treasurer for SGA for the past two years and hopes to make a difference on campus.

She's been really great to incoming freshmen by making them feel welcome and explaining everything," said Drew English, SGA freshman representative. "She's really encouraging and a great role model."

Ackerly is also president of the society of health sciences, president of MAA and vice president Zeta Tau Alpha. She is involved in Thornwell's big sister program and Stirlings.

Ackerly plans on staying involved on campus this year, which she admits will be a challenge.

The hardest thing about PC is definitely the academics," said Ackerly. "It's hard keeping up with studies and giving 100 percent to everything."

When asked what she will miss the most about PC, Ackerly said she would "really miss the people and all of the smiling faces everyday."

Like all of PC's seniors, after Ackerly's freshman year, Dr. Griffith became the new president. Ackerly attributes all of the changes around PC to him, including "a boost in school spirit." She believes that PC is "on the way up."

Ackerly plans on applying for medical school and hopes to become a pediatrician.

She will find out soon if she is accepted and joked that if she wasn't accepted she would just keep reapplying and reapplying.

"Get involved in campus and community activities" is Ackerly's advice for PC students. "Don't stress out too much about life. Be happy and change what you can change, but accept what you can not."

The Valerie Neely Story

by Anne Sullivan
staff writer

Valerie Elmore Neely is a woman all PC students have grown to know and love over the years. She is the one student runs to while having a nervous breakdown over a problem with their schedules.

Valerie has been working for nine years as PC's records clerk. Her main job is organizing and putting together students' schedules.

When asked what her favorite part of her job is, she answered "More than anything, I love solving students' problems."

Valerie is a native of Laurens, SC. She attended the Cortez Peters Business College in Washington, D.C. before returning to Laurens and accepting her job at PC.

She has been happily married for almost 27 years and has seven children, including two sets of twins.

While not working in the registrar's office, Valerie enjoys reading and taking care of her children. She hopes to one day travel outside of the US.

Mens and Womens Soccer hitting the goal

by Jack Carmody
Sports Editor

Successful mens and womens soccer teams have long been a staple for PC. This year is no different. As of October 13, the men have a record of 9-4-1, while the women are 6-4-1.

On October 4, the men took on rival Newberry at the Ponderosa. Senior forward Jamil Ficklin scored the first two goals for PC, less than 10 seconds apart from each other.

Next, Ficklin dished out an assist to fellow senior Tommy Wolfenberger to give PC a 3-1 lead in the 25th minute. Keith Steen scored in the 38th minute to push the lead to 4-1. Chris Middendorf scored off a penalty kick and Jeff Hendrix scored in the 74th minute to yield the final score of 6-2.

The men traveled to Spartanburg, SC, on October 7, to battle the University of South Carolina at Spartanburg (USCS). USCS came into the game ranked #11 in the nation. Presbyterian was down 1-0 at the 17:05 mark, until junior Jeff Henrix headed the ball on a Keith Steen direct kick. USCS took the lead again with a minute to go in the first half. Ficklin tied the score for PC again, with a goal in minute 59. USCS scored a final time, with just 23 seconds left, to take the game, 3-2.

On October 11, the Blue Hose men took on the Bulldogs of Wingate. After 30 minutes of scoreless ball, freshman

The South Atlantic Conference (SAC) tournament is just a few days away.

"We had two disappointing conference losses early in the year," said senior captain Walter Howard. "We will definitely be looking to make amends in the SAC tournament."

On October 2, the women took on the 25th ranked Bulldogs of Wingate. Just over a minute into the game, Asheley Davies scored off an assist from Jessi Adair and Kim Counts, to give the Blue Hose the lead 1-0. Adair scored from a Counts assist to push the lead to the final score of 2-0. Keeper Lara Johnson had six saves in 60 minutes of action.

The team traveled to Florence, SC, on October 7, to play a game against 11th ranked Francis-Marion. The Patriots scored just 8:30 into the game, to take the lead 1-0. Another goal at 37:14 made the score 2-0. Davies scored for PC early in the second half, on a pass from Jamie Harris. PC's second goal came from freshman Delisa Smith off a corner kick from Jessi Adair. The score was tied, 2-2, as the teams went into overtime. Almost 116 minutes into the game, Francis-Marion scored the winning goal, beating the Blue Hose, 3-2.

The womens team was at home for their game against Longwood College on October 11. Senior midfielder Jamie Harris scored both goals for PC, as the ladies took the game, 2-0. Harris scored her first goal at the 14:38 mark off an assist from teammate junior midfielder Counts. She scored her second goal during the 78th minute. Freshman keeper Aimee Tatom earned a shutout, not allowing a goal and tallying two saves.

Both men and women play at home tomorrow, October 21. The women play Lander University at 4:00, while the guys take on Catawba at 7:00. These games will be the first played in the new soccer stadium.

Cunningham, Maxwell help PC to win big

by Jack Carmody
Sports Editor

Saturday, October 7, PC's football team knocked off the #2 team in the nation, 45-42.

Then the goalposts came down.

PC entered the game having lost to Carson-Newman each of the past thirteen years. After last year's heartbreaking loss, PC was looking forward to a better outcome.

By the looks of the first play from scrimmage, it looked like it was going to be a long day for PC. The Eagles completed a 65-yard touchdown pass. Carson-Newman missed the point after, making the score 6-0. However, PC countered with 14 straight points of its own.

Quarterback Todd Cunningham hit Travis Smith in the endzone from five yards out with 6:22 left in the first quarter.

On Carson-Newman's next possession, the PC defense came up big, holding the Eagles on a fourth down and inches. Soon after, Cunningham found Kevie Smith for a 43-yard touchdown, giving the Blue Hose a 14-6 lead with 5:12 to go in the first quarter.

Carson-Newman regained the lead with 22 unanswered points. PC fought back late in the second quarter when Cunningham threw a 53-yard touchdown pass to tailback Donald Wilson. John Redding added a 24-yard field goal with :25 to go in the first half, to make the score 28-21.

PC struck early in the second half. Less than a minute into the quarter, Cunningham hit Wilson for a long touchdown, this one of 66 yards. PC took the lead 31-28.

Midway through the quarter, Cunningham completed a 23-yard touchdown to senior receiver D.J. Humphries, giving PC a 38-28 lead.

Carson-Newman cut the lead to 38-35 in the closing minutes of the third quarter with a short touchdown run.

Cunningham's sixth touchdown pass was again to Travis Smith, a 27-yarder with 13:46 to go in the game. This score pushed the lead back up 10 points to 45-35.

Carson-Newman then marched the ball 82 yards in 11 plays, capped off by a nine yard touchdown run with 4:46 remaining in the game, making the score 45-42.

With 2:30 to go in the game, Carson-Newman started their final possession. They moved the ball all the way to the PC 40 yard line, but a fumble ended any hope of a Carson-Newman victory.

Minutes after time expired in the game, hundreds of PC students rushed the field in celebration. Both goalposts were torn down.

"We took the goalposts down faster than you can say 'Blue Hose,'" said one fan.

PC's win snapped Carson-

Newman's 29-game South Atlantic Conference (SAC) winning streak. Donald Wilson finished the game running for 81 yards on 14 carries and catching three passes for a career-high 121 yards and two TDs. Travis Smith, after missing the last two games with a separated shoulder, came back to catch seven passes for 136 yards two TDs.

PC also had two other standouts. Todd Cunningham and Nacomma Maxwell were named offensive and defensive players of the week by Don Hansen's Football Gazette and D2Football.com.

Cunningham completed 21-of-42 passes for 409 yards and six touchdowns. Maxwell led the defense with a career-high 17 tackles. He also recovered three fumbles and forced another.

"It's a really big honor," said Maxwell about being named Defensive Player of the week. "But I also had 11 other players on the field helping me."

PC moved up to #36 in the nation for Division II with the win. Their next game is at Wingate on October 21.

least one semester's duration.

The official portfolio will be kept in the Academic Affairs office, and it will be on record by advanced digital technology, which will allow students to transfer new materials (papers written/presented, record of oral presentations, etc.) to the official portfolio record at any time.

The Senior Capstone, a two hour course, is to engage students from a variety of majors in a discussion of a single interdisciplinary topic or theme.

This includes peer group learning assignments; to encourage students to reflect and evaluate the impact of learning at PC through general education, their majors, and through electives upon their values; to complete and certify the portfolio and review the fulfillment of proficiency requirements in communication and the accomplishment of practicum or intercultural education requirements and assist students in the transition from the academy into lifelong learning.

If the plan passes (due to votes by the faculty), the proposal will be implemented in the Fall of 2002 with the offering of Introduction to Inquiry.

PC community to the challenges of diversity," said Dr. Ann Stidham, psychology professor.

Reading/discussion groups will be formed to provide opportunities to examine issues in depth. One or two faculty/staff members along with one or two student leaders will lead groups in discussing various topics.

At least eight groups will be formed with up to fifteen people in each group to provide a healthy discussion atmosphere. This year's reading material will be Anne Moody's autobiography, "Coming of Age in Mississippi." PU also hopes to bring in older South Carolinians to speak to the groups in order to bring the issues closer to home.

The kickoff for Project Understanding's reading groups will be a dinner scheduled for Tuesday, November 7 at 6:00 p.m.

This will be a time of fellowship and introducing the plans for this school year. Sign up sheets for these reading groups will be in GDH and Springs in the following weeks.

One of the goals for PU this year is to "get more people involved to understand what's going on," said senior Monica Choplin.

Lectures on diversity are planned throughout the year, and they are open to anyone interested. All students, faculty and staff members, as well as people from the community are encouraged to get involved with Project Understanding in order to better our campus.

three co-chairs of the Russell Committee helped foot the bill on the trip. "I was impressed with 'The Roots' sincerity. Even though I couldn't understand everything they said, they worked very hard to be inclusive."

"It was very electric," said senior Allen "Chizz" Chisolm of the different styles of hip-hop played at the concert. "The sound system wasn't the best in the world, but they did well with what they had. Overall, I give it two thumbs up."

While the concert excited, the High Museum, which featured a special Van Gogh exhibit, offered more mixed reactions.

"I love Van Gogh, [and] I like the lighting in the museum," said Alejandra Vinnencio, an amity student from Chile. "But there were too many people in there right then."

"I have mixed feelings," said Baker. "On one hand, they are making magnificent works of art available to everyone. On the other hand, they are pre-packaging and marketing that art. As you walk through a very crowded room, people are milling around you, you have a program telling you what to look at and you are pushed into a gift shop. This makes it harder to appreciate that art."

On the whole, the trip was enjoyed by the members of the class, without the faculty constantly saying that this trip was one of the best that the course has ever offered.

"This is the thirteenth year that this trip has been done," said Skinner. "We haven't always gone to Atlanta...but because we wanted to get more and more media in, we came to Atlanta. [This year] we've gotten to do more than we've ever done before."

PC in politics: students get active by Skye Earls and Doodle Harris

Editors

With the election coming up in a couple of days, it is time to explore how involved the PC campus and its students are in politics. Voting, the recently formed political science club and involvement in varying campaigns are items that PC is taking up and taking charge in.

Assistant professor of political science Chris Grant, feels the PC campus is involved well politically.

"All told, there is more political activism on this campus than any other I have been on. I think PC students are bright and perceptive," Grant said.

Agreeing with Grant, assistant professor of political science Jonathan Smith also feels this campus is very politically active.

"I think we do quite well compared to other campuses. Professor Grant worked hard to get John McCain to this campus," Smith said. "I also know of several students involved in the elections right now. To be sure, we could do more-but compared to other institutions I think we are doing well."

On campus, a voter registration drive was held.

Multicultural Student Union [MSU] President, Senior Rachel Sloan said, "The voter registration drive sponsored by MSU and Delta Sigma Theta, was very successful. Eighty-three people registered to vote and they ranged from Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Florida. We are excited that we were able to help the campus community. It is extremely important for college students to vote. If you want your voice to be heard, then you should vote."

Junior Katie Fowler is also involved in politics, in campaigns and in Young Democrats.

"I am an intern for Betsy Ross who is running for South Carolina House of Representatives," Fowler said. "Young Democrats does not meet because of schedules, we communicate via e-mail. I send out notices at least once a week about volunteer opportunities and they reply with when they want to go. Turn out is good, energy is high and everyone wants to be involved. [It is a] Great group of people."

Sophomore Mitchell Spearman is an other extremely active student politically on the PC campus.

"I can say that I have probably had the most diverse involvement of politics as anyone around," Spearman said. "You see I have worked for both Democrats (currently Representative Margaret Gamble, and in previous years-my cousins, mother, Nick Theodore, Governor Hodges and Superintendent of Education Inez Tennenbaum) and Republicans (my mother-who switched parties, Secretary of Agriculture Les Tindal, David Beasley, and Strom Thurmond). As a moderate, I swing back and forth and tend to be less party-driven and more personal in my candidates. I have been involved in the campaigning aspect, the public policy aspect and then the lobbying and government liaison arena. Such an awesome experience!" Spearman said.

Senior Sara Hopper is involved politically both on-campus and off also.

"I currently work for a South Carolina Senator (Andre' Bauer, District 18), traveling to Columbia two days a week... I mainly do constituent services for Senator Bauer right now. He is up for reelection on November 7th, so I have also helped out with his campaign by helping out at his fundraisers. Another way I am involved in politics was through Pi Sigma Alpha (political science honor society). We co-sponsored with the Political Science club the presidential debate watches. Last year I was the Presbyterian College Bush for Presidential representative," Hopper said.

Senior Kevin Hales is yet another highly involved PC student.

"I am a member of the Political Science Club of PC, Vice President of Pi Sigma Alpha honors fraternity for political science, and a member of the Young Democrats of PC," he said. "This summer I was an intern with the Fourth Circuit Solicitor's Office and worked on the successful re-election campaign of Solicitor Jay Hodge. I am currently volunteering my time to work on the campaign of Betsy Ross, who is running for the State House."

Another very active participant of politics from the PC campus is Senior Cotton Clarke.

"I have been involved in politics since I was 5 years old," said Clarke. My father has run in several campaigns as a Republican and has served on Richland County Council. I have taken up the task of organizing the College Republicans at Presbyterian College in the hopes that we can maintain a strong conservative base in South Carolina and all around in the South. We have also started to help many candidates running for State House and Senate... I am helping with my father's campaign for South Carolina House seat 78 in Columbia," Clarke said.

Faculty challenged to take sleepover seriously

Last night, students at PC spent the night hanging out with several of their favorite members of the faculty and staff. Actually, "several" is not the most accurate adjective. What about "very few?"

Presbyterian College has many wonderful selling points: high academic expectations, an amazing commitment to service, a dedication to honor, etc. Oh yeah, there's that Christian community thing we've got going on too...or do we?

Yesterday was the RHA sponsored annual faculty/staff sleepover. SUB did their part to provide a band and to sponsor a run to Waffle House in the middle of the night. The music department provided entertainment with their fall concert.

During the week of October 16, the Residence Life Office sent a memo to the faculty and staff of Presbyterian College asking each member to participate in the sleepover. The recipients of the memo were given a week to respond. Two male members of the faculty and six male members of the staff agreed (one of those staff members was Mike Rosolino himself). Zero female members of the faculty and four members of the staff agreed. Let's do the math: 8 males participating for 3 halls in Bailey, 8 halls in Georgia, 3 halls in Barron and 1 slot in CIH - 53% of the male halls get to participate in this wonderful activity. For the females, 4 females participating for 3 halls in Smyth, 3 halls in Clinton, 1 hall in Oak Hill, 1 hall in Grotnes and one in each of Laurens, Barnwell and CIH - with 4 females in 15 slots, we don't even want to do the math.

What is even sadder is the amount of faculty that responded to the memo by Residence Life. In addition to the prior twelve, only six members of the faculty and staff responded with apologies of prior commitments. All in all, the faculty and staff deserve the grade of F on this mid-term report.

We know that faculty and staff have other lives and families and commitments. We know (or at least hope) that our faculty and staff are as involved and well-rounded as we are. Truly, we, the students, are grateful for the times you, the members of the faculty and staff, spare for us between classes, outside of classes and the meals you buy us at "Taste of Yesterdays." We appreciate the constant demonstrations of your support when you attend our soccer games or senior seminars in biology.

However, we here at "The Blue Stocking" remember this event as the first faculty-staff sleepover. We remember our professors saying, "oh, I never knew..." and "you really say so and I believe you!" We even remember one professor saying, "Can you believe Dr. So-and-So was actually sleeping?" and "The Dr. So-and-So really snore?"

We know you guys, you are murderers of our friends, our dormitories, our cell phones and, occasionally, our micro and data. Especially when the RAs received the microphone, lot of faculty and staff who bothered responding to Residence Life's offer to participate in this community building opportunity, our hearts sank into the dirt.

Is that time at your job busy for faculty and staff? Was Residence Life's moment too busy enough? Did RHA sleepover have publicity? Was it too late band just not cool enough? Are hall halls just too gross?

We don't know. We were hoping you guys could have helped us answer these questions.

The Blue Stocking issues this challenge. We challenge RHA, Residence Life and the faculty and staff to work together to solve the problems of low faculty and staff participation. We hope that next year's sleepover is fun and meaningful and that everyone gets (or takes) the opportunity to be involved.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Blue Stocking Editor,

I wanted to take this opportunity to express my concerns to the campus community about the latest edition of the Pac saC, our campus yearbook.

The Pac saC is a chronicle of the year's events and it is a shame that the yearbooks are made available after our seniors are gone. I understand that deadlines are hard to make, but is there any way that current seniors could receive yearbooks before the year ends? However, the timeliness of this publication is the least of my concerns.

This past year was a turning point in PC's history. We were able to have our first historically African-American Sorority, Delta Sigma Theta, on campus. When I opened up my yearbook and turned to the Greek Life section to look for our layout, I was EX-TREMELY, EXTREMELY DISAPPOINTED, that it was no where to be found.

Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc. was well received by the campus community and Greek system, and is very appreciative for that. But for some unknown reason, our two-page layout was left out of the Greek Life section of the yearbook. No, it was not because of the "slackness" of me and my sisters, because pictures were taken and our organizational information was submitted. But who is to blame? (In trying to answer this question, last year's Pac saC editor was contacted; however, no reply has yet come back.)

I trust that this year's Pac saC staff will try to accommodate new and exciting organizations and events in addition to producing the yearbook in a more timely fashion. Respectfully submitted,

Tanisha L. Jenkins
Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc.

Dear Editor,

Kevin Young will be killed Friday, Nov. 3.

South Carolina has killed many men and will kill many more in the name of justice. Today, the state will add another name to the list of those it has killed by executing Kevin Young, a strong group of students from Presbyterian College supports the abolition of the death penalty and attend each execution in the hope that a message of love and forgiveness will spread and one day replace the pain and anger of vengeance.

Along with our presence at the execution, we attended a service of repentance and avenged at the governor's mansion on Thursday. Our presence at these events is fueled by our concern, love and hope for peace for those being executed, their families, their victims and their victim's families.

We will meet at the Info booth at 4:00pm to travel to Columbia. Whether you support, oppose or are unsure of your position on the death penalty, we sincerely invite you to join us. We feel that it is important to stand on this issue and become active in the fight for justice. If you have any questions, please call Mario Chappel (938-0834) or Matt Hastie.

Thank you for your time, and please keep the family of Kevin Young and the families of his victims in your thoughts and prayers.

Respectfully submitted,
Mario Chappel and Matt Hastie

America, a foreign perspective

When I was going on a trip by train from Seattle, Wash., to Greenville, S.C. (strange I know), a little girl asked me, "Why are you here?" and I replied, "I am going to school."

After a couple of minutes, she asked, "Why in the States?" I did not know what to say at that moment. Now that two months have passed, the answer seems pretty clear and rather obvious: I am here because I wanted to know what makes people from different countries have different lifestyles. It is as simple as that.

The first thing I noticed, and which was a little bit strange to me, is the fact that Americans are extremely polite. The other day, a four-year-old boy said "hi" to me on the street, and I was completely shocked. I would never have expected something like that to happen in Chile (not even from an adult, strangely enough.) For some reason I have not been able to figure out yet, politeness seems to be a very important factor in American society. It seems that you are almost obliged to greet every single person you may run into, which is, in my opinion, something all cultures should consider as part of their everyday social interaction.

When I got to school, I was introduced to my roommate, and we became very good friends. However, some rules and restrictions were set, which brought me up to date with all the customs concerning interaction among college students. They are extremely independent, but kind, reserved, yet respectful. Above all, they care about you and make you feel at home.

Another point worth mentioning is the ways Americans make use of time. In certain cultures, the Chilean included, people tend to take naps, to have a very long lunchtime, to have long conversations at work and to do things that require a very large amount of time. In America, however, people tend to make the best of their time; they have lunch as quickly as possible because they always have something else to do. Social meeting tend to last no more than a couple of hours, which is absolutely different from the customs in Latin American countries. In Chile, if you are invited to a birthday party, you are supposed to stay there for at least three or four hours. In fact, weddings in the south of Chile last four or five days!

In academic terms, Chilean professors do not give students homework everyday, and there are just two big exams in one semester. In America, you always have something to read for the next day and many papers to write before the next class. Students also have at least four or five smaller exams per semester and one big exam at the end of it. Therefore, American students are a lot busier than most people I know, and they also study a lot more than I was used to studying in Chile.

Another important difference is that education in America is really open in terms of what career you choose for your future. What I mean to say is that in Chile, for instance, if you decide to study English, almost all of the classes you take relate to English. However, in the United States you may take different classes no matter what your major is, as long as you get the credits required for your curriculum. For example, a friend of mine is a psychology major, but she takes many different classes, such as arts, literature, spanish and mathematics.

This example shows why Americans are open-minded when it comes to talking about anything; they always have something to say, and their knowledge is extremely broad. In other words, Americans are a very cultured people.

From all the things that I have noticed about America which are different from my home country, I am very excited to stay here, and I am sure I will keep finding more interesting differences that will make my decision to come here to study an experience of a lifetime!

Alcohol use a concern for campus

Alcohol has become the drug of choice on many college campuses today.

A recent Harvard University study found that 42.7 percent of students had been binge drinking in the past two weeks, and that students drink to get "drunk." Alcohol is now a factor in 40 percent of all academic problems and in 28 percent of all college dropouts. Do you believe that PC is exempt from this phenomenon?

Binge drinking has reached an all time high on many college campuses. Many researchers define binge drinking for men and women as drinking five or more drinks at one sitting. Thirty one percent of college women binge drink compared with 52 percent of college men.

Developmentally, the ages 18 through 21 is the period of heaviest alcohol consumption for most drinkers in the United States. However, within this heavy-drinking age group, binge drinking is more prevalent among college students than among non-students. Students who binge drink are more likely to damage property, have trouble with authorities, miss classes, have hangovers and experience injuries than those who do not binge drink.

Does any of this apply to you? Do you fall into any of these statistics? Does Presbyterian College even have a problem with alcohol? You be the judge.

Off The Record
Ben Acton

The first word I ever read was "BOOM!" The word appeared in a small, thin Superman story book. Superman was thwarting the mad schemes of a mad scientist. As the evil scientist attempted his escape, his escape boat blew up. Scrawled in fiery red letters across a black background was the word: "BOOM!"

What I remember even more vividly than that word is how I felt when I read and then said it. There was a feeling of respect and of pride as my mother asked me how I knew that word. But such pride was not only a result of winning my mother's awe; it was also a result of amazing myself. I felt a new world open up. Letters were no longer simply images on the page, rather they were coherent symbols that could be interpreted and used to stimulate a young child's imagination. Although I did not know it at the time, I had taken the first step in a long journey of learning how to use language, of broadening my horizons as far as my imagination could take me.

After that first word, there came a second and a third and countless more. I could not stop. There was real joy for me in using language, not only in reading, but also in writing, in acting in church plays and in talking. (As many may know this last activity became my most favorite.)

Through these many linguistic endeavors I discovered that language provides connections with the past and encourages dreams of the future. I have been blessed this year to rediscover the joy that comes in using different languages. This year I am taking Spanish 101.

Although I have completed my language requirements, I decided to take Spanish because of an experience in Honduras last spring. Being in a culture where I did not know the language, I got extremely frustrated at constantly asking "How do I say this?" and "What does that mean?" To remedy the frustration, I enrolled in Spanish 101, 8:00 a.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Fridays. (Pretty sick for a senior, eh?)

Despite the lack of sleep I have been experiencing, Spanish is one of the most rewarding classes I have taken at PC. Again, I am experiencing the joy of learning a language and experiencing a culture that comes with it. I can dream of going to Cuba next semester and actually know what I am doing. I can forge bonds with people of different cultures and know that language is not a barrier.

That is not to say learning the language is easy. There have been and will continue to be many missteps and frustrations. Learning a language is sometimes embarrassing, frustrating, uncomfortable and awkward. Not being able to understand what is going on around you develops a sense of helplessness that I have both in Honduras and in my Spanish class.

But the chance for growth is great, and it keeps me moving on. After all, that is what this liberal arts education is about: expanding the possibilities for every student, whether it be in music, foreign language, mathematics, literature, science or any other subject. And if we all take the time to listen to what is being said, even when we may not catch the meaning of every word, we may hear the sound of new worlds and new passions opening up.

"Almost Famous", written and directed by Cameron Crowe, starring Patrick Fugit, Billy Crudup, Frances McDormand, and Kate Hudson. Rated (R)

Could you even imagine that at the age of 15 you could seize the opportunity to live your dream? A dream that seemed it was unreachable because you couldn't receive any respect because you were 15? In "Almost Famous," a semi-autobiographical film written and directed by Cameron Crowe, William Miller (first appearance for Patrick Fugit) is given that opportunity by Lester Bangs (Philip Seymour Hoffman), who was the producer of Creem Magazine, a California rock magazine of the 1970s.

The film is set in 1973, a dangerous time for rock and roll. The war is over, drugs are everywhere, youth and young adults are trying to figure out who they are and there is music called rock and roll. According to Miller's run-away sister, Anita (Zoey Deschanel), he can listen to Tommy with a candle burning and see his entire future.

The future of rock and roll was definitely an unknown venture to many people at the time. Find a manager, have some groupies, put out a record or a tape, get played on the radio and hopefully you and your band will tour and make some money. "Stillwater," the band that Billy follows for "Rolling Stone" in the film, decides to accept this 15-year-old journalist who is considered the enemy. (Rock writers were considered to be the enemies because some of the articles written were untrue. Sound familiar to what is written in some magazines or papers today?)

As Miller starts to follow the band, Bangs coaches him on how to act and remain neutral while traveling. "You CANNOT make friends with the rock stars," states Bangs at one point. "Cannot make friends with the rock stars. That's what's important. If you're a rock journalist, a true journalist — first you won't get paid much. But you will get free records from the record company." By trying to remain neutral, Miller has a difficult time receiving an interview.

The pressure is increasingly put on him from two sources: "Rolling Stone" who wants him to get an interview with Russell (Billy Crudup), who is Stillwater's lead guitarist, and his college professor mother (Academy Award-winner Frances McDormand) who wants Billy to graduate high school three years early, not become corrupted by rock music.

At one point McDormand, in her best motherly fashion, tells Russell that her son "is not ready for your world of compromised values and diminished brain cells that you throw away like confetti. Am I speaking clearly to you?"

But what Billy hears clearly is the allure of the band and it's world, which includes the "Band-Aids," group of pseudo-groupies led by "Penny Lane" (Kate Hudson).

In order to get the interview with Russell and in hopes of "making it" with Penny, Miller remains with the band, traveling and living with them. Time goes on, deadlines need to be met and many more storylines are intertwined. Throughout the movie, the audience learns that "famous people are just more interesting" than common, ordinary folk.

The balance that Crowe sets between the world of celebrity and of reality is almost invisible. Billy and the audience is caught up in the desire of wanting to be famous, while at the same time realizing that most of us are not even close to being famous. The most we can hope for is a brief taste, our own fifteen minutes. And that is one of the feelings you receive from walking away from the movie: a dream, anything could happen; why, it could be me!

I would venture out to say that this movie was two hours long and seemed approximately one hour. Good storyline, engaging characters and a pretty decent message. At times the film seemed almost too polished and simple in its definitions of right and wrong, but overall Crowe captured well the desire of us all to be famous, or at least almost so.

Spearman is involved because of how important he thinks it is to him personally.

"I feel an unbelievably passionate, undying desire to serve others," he said. "This desire has shaped my future plans to run for the State House and hopefully Governor. I still believe that there are noble, good, righteous people that want to serve others for no personal benefit except the satisfaction of doing so. Just hope I can fill those big shoes!"

Clarke's involvement stems from a personal mission he finds in politics, as do many of the students.

"A main reason for starting the College Republicans Club is because not enough young people vote," Clarke said. "It we do not care now, when will we begin to care? It has been my goal not just to try to recruit people into the Republican Party, but also to stimulate people to go out and vote and let their voice be heard."

Talies looks at the big picture when discussing why people should be involved.

"I feel that it is important for every person to be knowledgeable about politics because the laws that are made every day effect our lives," he said. "I think that it is especially important for college students to be involved in the political system because we have such a bad reputation for being apathetic when it comes to government."

Grant feels students are obliged to be involved.

"Students and any citizen for that matter, have an obligation to stay informed on issues confronting the nation," Grant said. "We have been blessed with an opportunity to control our government; it would be irresponsible not to be capable of informed participation in it."

Smith uses a famous quote to help sum up the importance of students to be involved.

"I think Plato said it best: The penalty that good men pay for indifference to public affairs is to be ruled by evil men. Ultimately, we get the government we deserve," he said. "So, if you do not take an active interest in the selection of your government officials, I do not really see where you have a right to complain. But then again, I am a political scientist. I do this for a living."

Faculty makes important decisions

On Thursday, October 25, PC had a campus-wide faculty meeting. During the meeting, the core requirements that the Blue Stocking reported on in its last issue were approved. Thus, beginning in the fall of 2002, PC students will be required to take courses titled "Introduction to Inquiry" and "Senior Capstone." In addition, students will be required to develop and maintain a portfolio.

At the same meeting, religion professor, Dr. George Ramsey proposed a resolution that PC faculty take a public stand against a lottery in South Carolina. The resolution was voted down.

Bell and Gambrell excel on and off the field

Seniors Rod Gambrell and Joey Bell work just as hard off the football field as they do on it.

Gambrell is originally from Seneca, S.C., and Bell is from Savannah, Ga.; both are business administration majors.

"I hope to find a job in a big city like Atlanta, Charlotte or Charleston after I graduate," said Gambrell. "I also plan on going to graduate school."

Bell also said that he wanted to go to graduate school and get a job after graduating from PC. Bell added that he will miss the people of PC the most when he leaves school.

"I have enjoyed the friendships and acquaintances that I have made here at PC," said Bell. "I've also enjoyed being on my own and playing college football here at school."

In addition to playing right corner for the Blue Hose football team, Gambrell has been an officer in the Multicultural Student Union (MSU) for the past two years. He added that he is also a member of PC Navigators and the Athletic Advisory Board.

Bell, a running back for the football team, currently holds the office of Sergeant-at-Arms for MSU and is on the Alcohol Advisory Board.

school building a new football stadium in the next few years.

"I think that it's great," said Gambrell. "I just hate the fact that I will never get to play in the new stadium, but I'm looking forward to coming back to see the team play there."

Gambrell said that he was overjoyed and overwhelmed at the celebration of PC's win over Carson-Newman College, which included the tearing down of both goal posts during Homecoming football game a few weeks ago in Bailey Stadium.

"I was jumping around so much, I didn't get to see [the goal posts] come down," said Bell. "The only thing that I saw was them taking the goal posts out of the stadium on their shoulders. It was great!"

"We just thought that only one would come down, but I was astounded that both of them were torn down," said Gambrell.

Bell and Gambrell said that the football players have more goals for the team than just beating Carson-Newman.

"Carson-Newman was just one hurdle for the team," said Gambrell. "It was just a stepping stone to bigger and better things."

Gambrell alluded that there could be a repeat performance of the students tearing down the goalposts if the football team defeated Newberry College on Nov. 11 and retained the coveted Bronze Derby.

New PC staff member and PC alum Raymond Ruff has found his "perfect job" — one that he was prepared to do during his education at PC.

Ruff is the new administration staff working for finance and computer services. Ruff graduated this past May from PC with a major in business and a minor in computer science. Ruff's primary duty consists of accounting functions; however, he also provides computer support for the business department at PC.

Ruff's accounting duties include dittacting connections he's always enjoyed at PC.

"Faculty interaction makes the job fun," Ruff said. Ruff considered other possibilities before deciding on employment at PC, but gradually the doors opened to lead him in the direction of his alma mater.

Ruff said that his PC education definitely prepared him for the work he is doing now.

"I received a great education from the business department," Ruff said about his preparation. "My job is the perfect blend of my major and minor."

Ruff hopes to continue to learn and grow while on the job.

"I'm still new," he said, reflecting on the possibilities of the future. "and I want to keep learning and improving."

Thus, beginning in the fall of 2002, PC students will be required to take courses titled "Introduction to Inquiry" and "Senior Capstone." In addition, students will be required to develop and maintain a portfolio.

At the same meeting, religion professor, Dr. George Ramsey proposed a resolution that PC faculty take a public stand against a lottery in South Carolina. The resolution was voted down.

Bell and Gambrell excel on and off the field

Seniors Rod Gambrell and Joey Bell work just as hard on the football field as they do in the classroom.

Gambrell is originally from Seneca, S.C. and Bell is from Savannah, Ga., both are business administration majors.

"I hope to find a job in a big city like Atlanta, Charlotte or Charleston after I graduate," said Gambrell. "I also plan on going to graduate school."

Bell also said that he wanted to go to graduate school and get a job after graduating from PC. Bell added that he will miss the people of PC the most when he leaves school.

"I have enjoyed the friendships and acquaintances that I have made here at PC," said Bell. "I've also enjoyed being on my own and playing college football here at school."

In addition to playing right corner for the Blue Hose football team, Gambrell has been an officer in the Multicultural Student Union (MSU) for the past two years. He added that he is also a member of PC Navigators and the Athletic Advisory Board.

Bell, a running back for the football team, currently holds the office of Sergeant-at-Arms for MSU and is on the Alcohol Advisory Board.

"We just thought that only one would come down, but I was astounded that both of them were torn down," said Gambrell.

Bell and Gambrell said that the football players have more goals for the team than just beating Carson-Newman.

"Carson-Newman was just one hurdle for the team," said Gambrell. "It was just a stepping stone to bigger and better things."

Gambrell alluded that there could be a repeat performance of the students tearing down the goalposts if the football team defeated Newberry College on Nov. 11 and retained the coveted Bronze Derby.

Raymond Ruff Counts

by John Catoe
staff writer

New PC staff member and PC alum Raymond Ruff has found his "perfect job" one that he was prepared for during his education at PC.

Ruff is the new administration staff working for finance and computer services. Ruff graduated this past May from PC with a major in business and a minor in computer science. Ruff's primary duties consist of accounting functions, however, he also provides computer support for the business department at PC.

Ruff's accounting duties include determining budget works and determining financial issues. If there are departmental questions concerning budgets or if a department needs a credit card, they go to him. Ruff's computer duties mainly consist of general support for the business department. Ruff stated that one of his ongoing projects is developing a new laser printing system for the school.

Ruff said the transition between working as a student and as a staff member at PC was comfortable thanks to the faculty connections he's always enjoyed at PC.

"Faculty interaction makes the job fun," Ruff said.

Ruff considered other possibilities before deciding on employment at PC, but gradually the doors opened to lead him in the direction of his alma mater.

Ruff said that his PC education definitely prepared him for the work he is doing now.

"I received a great education from the business department," Ruff said about his preparation. "My job is the perfect blend of my major and minor."

Ruff hopes to continue to learn and grow while on the job.

"I'm still new," he said, reflecting on the possibilities of the future, "and I want to keep learning and improving."

Movie Review: Almost Famous

by Devon Beisser
Staff Writer

"Almost Famous", written and directed by Cameron Crowe, starring Patrick Fugit, Billy Crudup, Frances McDormand, and Kate Hudson. Rated (R)

Could you even imagine that at the age of 15 you could seize the opportunity to live your dream? A dream that seemed it was unreachable because you couldn't receive any respect because you were 15? In "Almost Famous", a semi-autobiographical film written and directed by Cameron Crowe, William Miller (first appearance for Patrick Fugit) is given that opportunity by Lester Bangs (Philip Seymour Hoffman), who was the producer of Creem Magazine, a California rock magazine of the 1970s.

The film is set in 1973, a dangerous time for rock and young adults are trying to figure out who they are and there is music called rock and roll. According to Miller's run-away sister, Anita (Zoey Deschanel), he can listen to Tommy with a candle burning and see his entire future.

The future of rock and roll was definitely an unknown venture to many people at the time. Find a manager, have some groupies, put out a record or a tape, get played on the radio and hopefully you and your band will tour and make some money. "Stillwater," the band that Billy follows for "Rolling Stone" in the film, decides to accept this 15-year-old journalist who is considered the enemy. (Rock writers were considered to be the enemies because some of the articles written were untrue. Sound familiar to what is written in some magazines or papers today?)

As Miller starts to follow the band, Bangs coaches him on how to act and remain neutral while traveling. "You CANNOT make friends with the rock stars," states Bangs at one point. "Cannot make friends with the rock stars. That's what's important. If you're a rock journalist, a true journalist — first you won't get paid much. But you will get free records from the record company." By trying to remain neutral, Miller has a difficult time receiving an interview.

The pressure is increasingly put on him from two sources: "Rolling Stone" who wants him to get an interview with Russell (Billy Crudup), who is Stillwater's lead guitarist, and his college professor mother (Academy Award-winner Frances McDormand) who wants Billy to graduate high school three years early, not become corrupted by rock music.

At one point McDormand, in her best motherly fashion, tells Russell that her son "is not ready for your world of compromised values and diminished brain cells that you throw away like confetti. Am I speaking clearly to you?"

But what Billy hears clearly is the allure of the band and it's world, which includes the "Band-Aids," group of pseudo-groupies led by "Penny Lane" (Kate Hudson).

In order to get the interview with Russell and in hopes of "making it" with Penny, Miller remains with the band, traveling and living with them. Time goes on, deadlines need to be met and many more storylines are intertwined. Throughout the movie, the audience learns that "famous people are just more interesting" than common, ordinary folk.

The balance that Crowe sets between the world of celebrity and of reality is almost invisible. Billy and the audience is caught up in the desire of wanting to be famous, while at the same time realizing that most of us are not even close to being famous. The most we can hope for is a brief taste, our own fifteen minutes. And that is one of the feelings you receive from walking away from the movie: a dream, anything could happen; why, it could be me!

I would venture out to say that this movie was two hours long and seemed approximately one hour. Good storyline, engaging characters and a pretty decent message. At times the film seemed almost too polished and simple in its definitions of right and wrong, but overall Crowe captured well the desire of us all to be famous, or at least almost so.

Rating:  out of ***

Spearman is involved because of how important he thinks it is to him personally.

"I feel an unbelievably passionate, undying desire to serve others," he said. "This desire has shaped my future plans to run for the State House and hopefully Governor. I still believe that there are noble, good, righteous people that want to serve others for no personal benefit except the satisfaction of doing so. I just hope I can fill these big shoes."

Clarke's involvement stems from a personal mission he finds in politics, as do many of the students.

"A main reason for starting the College Republicans Club is because not enough young people vote," Clarke said. "If we do not care now, when will we begin to care? It has been my goal not just to try to recruit people into the Republican Party, but also to stimulate people to go out and vote and let their voice be heard."

Talks looks at the big picture when discussing why people should be involved.

"I feel that it is important for every person to be knowledgeable about politics because the laws that are made every day effect our lives," he said. "I think that it is especially important for college students to be involved in the political system because we have such a bad reputation for being apathetic when it comes to government."

Grant feels students are obliged to be involved.

"Students and any citizen for that matter, have an obligation to stay informed on issues confronting the nation," Grant said. "We have been blessed with an opportunity to control our government; it would be irresponsible not to be capable of informed participation in it."

Smith uses a famous quote to help sum up the importance of students to be involved.

"I think Plato said it best: 'The penalty that good men pay for indifference to public affairs is to be ruled by evil men.' Ultimately, we get the government we deserve," he said. "So, if you do not take an active interest in the selection of your government officials, I do not really see where you have a right to complain. But then again, I am a political scientist-I do this for a living."

Mens and Womens Soccer win games, awards

by Jack Carmody

Both men's and women's soccer teams had stellar performances last weekend at the first annual Food Lion South Atlantic Conference (SAC) Fall Sports Festival, held in Greenville, Tenn.

In the quarterfinals, the PC men edged past Tusculum 2-1 in overtime. PC got on the board first when freshman mid-fielder Guy Campbell scored off an assist from Tommy Woltenberger at the 32:12 mark. Tusculum tied the game in the second half and sent it into overtime. In overtime, at the 91:05 senior mid-fielder Keith Steen scored off a double assist from senior defender Nick Goan and freshman mid-fielder Derek Knapp to give PC the win.

In the semifinals, PC lost a heartbreaker to Catawba in three overtimes by a score of 3-2. PC built a 2-0 first half lead. Jeff Hendrix scored on a redirect by Andy Evans at the 9:34 mark to give PC their first score. Guy Campbell scored the second goal at 30:30. However, two second half goals by the Indians forced the match into two overtimes, and eventually penalty kicks. Catawba won the penalty kicks, 5-4, ending the mens SAC title hopes.

In the first round of the SAC Tournament, the women took on Mars Hill at Eden's Field. This marked the first ever post-season game played at the new stadium. PC tamed the Lions by a score of 6-0. PC scored quickly as Davies scored off an assist from Adair. PC scored three goals in the first eight minutes of the second half to secure the game. Davies scored again at the 48:10 mark off an assist from Adair. Adair countered with a goal of her own at the 49:50 mark, off an assist from sophomore mid-fielder Robyn Frederick. Freshman defender Delisa Smith added a goal at the 53:20 mark off an assist from junior defender Kim Counts. Junior defender Shannon McCall put one through at the 56:04 mark off another Adair assist. Davies finished the game with two goals, while Adair had one goal and dished out three assists.

In the womens semifinals, the women beat Catawba 2-1 in overtime. Catawba had a 1-0 lead going into the second half when Ashley Davies tied the score at 1-1 when she scored off an assist by Jamie Harris at the 58:35 mark. Davies also had the winning goal, as she punched in a corner kick nine minutes into overtime period.

The finals of the SAC Tourney had PC taking on the Pioneers of Tusculum. Although having more shots on goal than the Pioneers, by a 16-13 margin, Tusculum won the game, by a score of 3-0.

Both teams did take home a lot of hardware at the awards banquet.

On the men's side, four players made the All-SAC second team: junior forward Michael Napior, senior mid-fielder Tommy Woltenberger, senior Jamil Ficklin, and senior defender Warren Turner.

The women had six players make the All-SAC team. Making the second team were senior mid-fielder Ashley Davies and junior goal keeper Lara Johnson. On the first team were senior mid-fielder Jamie Harris, sophomore forward Jessi Adair, senior defender Courtney Swanson, and senior defender Katie Kelly.

Harris also took home the SAC Scholar Athlete of the Year. Harris ranks ninth in school history in career assists and tenth in career points. She is also a three time All-SAC selection. Swanson was named Player of the year. Swanson anchored the PC defense this year and is also a two time All-American. Head coach Brian Purcell was named SAC Coach of the Year for the third straight year, and for the seventh time over the past 11

Blue Hose football keeps rolling with three more victories

by Jack Carmody
Sports Editor

CUMMINGS, Ga. (WISN)—The Blue Hose football team traveled to the University of Virginia on Saturday, Nov. 3, to take on the Cavaliers. The Blue Hose won the game 56-7.

The game started with a strong jump by the Blue Hose. In the first quarter, quarterback Todd Cunningham caught a 25-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Todd Cunningham with 11:42 left to play in the first quarter. Two and a half minutes later, senior quarterback Donald Wilson caught a second touchdown pass of the game, this one for 39 yards. The Blue Hose took the lead early in the second quarter with a 25-yard touchdown pass, making the score 14-0. However, PC scored on their first possession on an 11-yard touchdown run by junior halfback Paul Freeman. The Blue Hose scored again in the closing minutes of the first half, making the score 21-14 going into the half.

Mars Hill tied the game at 21-21 in the opening minutes of the third quarter on a short touchdown run. The next score was for PC and came on a 65-yard drive, capped off by an 11-yard touchdown pass from Cunningham to wideout Travis Smith. Mars Hill answered on their next possession making the score 28-27, thanks to Mars Hill's extra point being blocked by junior defensive back Max Grant. Junior Ben Capors also came up for PC with an interception with 12:15 left in the game. The pick set up a 22-yard field goal by John Redding. Redding added another field goal, this one of 41 yards, making the score 34-27.

PC's next opponent was Wingate. The Bulldogs proved to be of little challenge to the Blue Hose, who tallied 553 yards of total offense. Todd Cunningham continued to put up big numbers, throwing for 291 yards, while completing 26-of-39 passes. Travis Smith led the receivers, catching five passes for 91 yards. Leading the running attack was junior halfback Joseph Bell, who had 12 carries for 123 yards and two touchdowns. Jerome Bryant also had 66 yards on the ground for PC. Redding added to the scoring attack, kicking two field goals. The defense held the Bulldogs to a meager 180 yards of total offense. Senior cornerback Rodenick Campbell anchored the secondary, making four solo tackles and breaking up four passes. Sophomore linebacker Shaun Payne had five tackles and three quarterback sacks.

Most recently, the Blue Hose traveled to Wise, Va., to take on the University of Virginia at Wise. PC dominated in every aspect of the game, winning by a final score of 56-7. PC gained 312 yards on the ground. Donald Wilson led the charge, running for 128 yards on seven carries, while adding two touchdowns runs. Special teams also played well, blocking two punts and one field goal attempt.

PC scored quickly in the first quarter, as Cunningham hit Humphries in the end zone from eight yards out. The next score came as fullback Jerome Bryant ran one in from one yard out, making the score 14-0. A touchdown pass from Cunningham to senior Di Young made the score 21-0. PC's special teams accounted for the next two TD's. Cornerback Max Grant blocked a punt and recovered it in the endzone. Later, junior Kevin Smith blocked a 21-yard field goal attempt, while Travis Smith picked up the loose ball and scampered 92 yards for the score. Virginia got on the board for the only time in the closing minutes of the second quarter, making the score 35-7. Wilson scored on runs of 52 and one yard to make the score 49-7. A 27-yard touchdown run by running back Paul Freeman ended the scoring at 56-7.

SIDEWALK TALK: WHO SHOULD PC STUDENTS ELECT PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AND WHY?

Josh Fowler
Senior

Both the candidates are very, very similar in their views and policies. When it comes time to vote, I'm Bush all the way because he's trying to privatize some social security. I feel like I can do better in the stock market than the government. I'd like something when I retire, and I don't see social security doing anything now.

Neither candidate fully expresses my opinions, but Al Gore is the clear choice because his policies will help the greater number of people. PC students should be concerned about the poor. After all, our motto is "Dum Vivimus Servimus."

Brandon Fralix
Senior

John Hickman
Junior

Examining the candidates from the vantage point of higher education, it seems to me that George Bush would not be a candidate if he didn't have his father's name. Although Al Gore doesn't always please the camera, he is the better candidate.

I'm gonning to vote for Al Gore because even though I like to consider myself a moderate republican, I'm looking for a president whose willing to recognize his faults and work on improving them. Over the last eight years, I've seen Gore attempt to improve his speaking ability, charismatic ability with the public and his willingness to take a firm stance on public issues of importance to me.

Terri Helfrey
Sophomore

Amanda Blackwell
Senior

I vote for Al Gore because he stands better on education and I like his outlook.

Bush. I feel that he has a good family background and strong morals which would be able to direct the country in a positive direction.

Louise Lami
Sophomore

Mitchell Spearman
Sophomore

Al Gore. Al Gore cares about the needs for college students with his program that gives tax deductions to families with college students, and he has national experience to be president of the US.

I'm not voting for either one of those guys. I'm writing in Alan Keyes.

Public Safety purchases SUV amidst student concern

by Tara Sluder
assignments editor

Most PC students are aware that a few new vehicles have been seen cruising around campus.

Most conspicuous is the new SUV that Public Safety has been making rounds in. Some of you have probably even questioned, or have heard others question, what need Public Safety has for a brand new SUV. Many of these comments stem from students' concerns about what their tuition is being used for.

"I don't really see the need for a brand new SUV on campus," senior Amanda Lamoreaux said. "For pose, that's great," junior Vaughn Carter said. "But it appears to students to be a cosmetic thing that just looks good. They should've informed the students before they got it and why they got it."

Many students share the opinion that the purchase of the SUV was unnecessary. What students may not be aware of, however, is that the car Public Safety replaced had 173, 282 miles on it, an engine that had been replaced once, a transmission that had been replaced twice and a brake system that had also been replaced once—repairs and maintenance that added up to $7000 last year.

In addition, the replaced vehicle was one of three cars in Public Safety's fleet. On average, officers put 100 miles on a car during the day shift and 15 miles during the night shift.

"A year ago we realized that [the replaced] vehicle was costing us $7000 just to keep it on the road," Larry Mulhall, director of Public Safety said. "To save money, we decided to turn that one in."

As for the issue of where the money came from to buy the SUV, Mulhall said that all the proper procedures were taken.

President Griffith commends KA

On Nov. 3, as fraternity "Bid Day" came to a close, Presbyterian College President John V. Griffith commended the members of PC's chapter of Kappa Alpha for agreeing not to fly the Confederate Flag, which has long been a symbol associated with PC's KAs.

"The KAs wrestled with this issue [of the flag] and made a very mature decision," Griffith said. "I'm proud of that."

Griffith also stressed that the KAs should be applauded by the College for their actions, a sentiment that was shared by Dr. Booker Ingram, professor of political science.

"I think [the KAs] have heard the voices of people who, in the past, have been hurt by [the flag]," Ingram said. "They showed a lot of respect... I think they need to be complimented for that."

According to Mr. Joe Nixon, dean of students, the decision to not fly the flag at this year's rush events was made by the KAs themselves and not mandated by the College.

Public Safety purchases SUV amidst student concern

by Tara Sluder
assignments editor

Most PC students are aware that a few new vehicles have been seen cruising around campus.

Most conspicuous is the new SUV that Public Safety has been making rounds in. Some of you have probably even questioned, or have heard others question, what need Public Safety has for a brand new SUV. Many of these comments stem from students' concerns about what their tuition is being used for.

"I don't really see the need for a brand new SUV on campus," senior Amanda Lamoreaux said. "For pose, that's great," junior Vaughn Carters said. "But it appears to students to be a cosmetic thing that just looks good. They should've informed the students before they got it and why they got it."

Recently, Project Understanding (PU) held a convocation in Belk Auditorium. Attendance was good for this event; the entire front half of Belk was filled! (That's right, the front half.) Most who were in attendance would agree that the convocation speaker, a diversity consultant for numerous corporations, was entertaining, dynamic, educational and informative. It is a shame then that many students did not get to hear the speaker.

Why was that? Was it a problem with publicity? Was it a lack of interest? These two reasons no doubt came into play for some students trying to decide what to do at 11:00 on Tuesday morning. We here at "The Blue Stocking" think it might have been a combination of the two.

First, the publicity argument. The convocation was advertised through the standard CEP posters, the College website, FYI (the on-line calendar of events available to the entire campus), announcements before various classes and organizations and the printed media.

However, there was a great deal of confusion with the publicity concerning the location of this convocation. Most of the posters and printed advertisements indicated that the convocation would be in Belk. Announcements and other advertisements indicated later that the convocation had been moved to Edmunds, since that facility was said to be more conducive to the speaker's presentation. But surprisingly, when Tuesday morning finally rolled around, the convocation had been moved from Edmunds back to Belk. It seems that Belk, though not an ideal space, did suffice for the speaker's needs.

Although there were signs on Edmunds pointing towards Belk as the old/new location for the convocation and although most students who wanted to go to the PU convocation did get there, one must ask how many students, upon hearing that the convocation had been moved from Belk to Edmunds, failed to show up at either venue for fear of being turned away? How many felt that their chain was being jerked around when they found out another CEP had been moved from Belk to Edmunds even though the majority of publicity preceding the event said the convocation would be in Belk?

The inconsistent advertising for this and other CEPs is a definite problem. By placing something somewhere and then changing it suddenly, you alienate students. Sometimes there is no way to avoid this problem; special considerations must be taken into account. But those planning different events need to make sure that when they are looking for speakers, they know where they want that speaker to speak and have the publicity for the event accurately reflect the location of the event. If this does not happen, the result will be disgruntled attendees, who might quit paying attention to any advertisements for any CEPs because those advertisements might be changed on them.

This does not excuse the students, however. All too often Belk auditorium resembles a dark, deserted cavern during the convocation hour. The lower level barely gets filled. This lack of an audience is one reason why performances get moved to Edmunds, and then suddenly people must be turned away, complaining about the denial of a needed performance to fulfill the CEP requirements.

However, complaining about a lack of performance convocations is ridiculous, especially when there are plenty of other performances to go to. The very nature of a performance demands that it be longer than a fifty minute convocation, meaning that most performance CEPs are held at night and in venues other than Belk Auditorium. By offering a performance convocation, the CEP department is doing the students a favor. (In fact, Laura Sheely, the director of the CEP programs, has gone out of her way to address these problems, including requiring students to obtain a free ticket to an event held in Edmunds to ensure that those really serious about the CEP will not be turned away, arranging seating in Belk to maximize space and proximity to the speaker and offering additional performance CEPs in order to accommodate students who may have been turned away at earlier events.)

If one is serious about going to a performance event, one should take the time and make the effort to spend the night at a play or a piano concert. Students who are not willing to put in this effort or show any interest in CEPs other than those they get into should not complain when they cannot get into a CEP.

Therefore, it seems to "The Blue Stocking" that the best solution to these problems would be for us all to work on better communication. If an event has to be moved, fine, just give students enough prior notice to accommodate their schedules to attend. If you cannot get into a CEP, don't get too uptight; there are plenty more where those came from.

Thanksgiving wishes from the president

As Thanksgiving break is right around the corner, I know that we all are very thankful to have a break from classes and a time to rest. But, how thankful are we?

Often, we seem to forget how truly blessed we are! We fail to realize the blessings that God has bestowed upon us. We are all students enrolled at this fine institution, receiving a quality education that others dream about, yet we take for granted the years we spend here.

Why do we spend the day complaining about things we cannot change?

State of the Blue Hose

Tanisha Jenkins

We must learn to live each day as if it were our last and be thankful for the trials and tribulations that come our way. Always remember that there is a blessing in the storm, and without a struggle there can be no progress.

Over Thanksgiving break take a minute to think about how blessed we are. Do not only do this on Thanksgiving Day while you are gathered with your family, but also count your blessings each and every day of your life.

Tomorrow is not promised, so be thankful today!

Questions for GDH, Springs

When the editors asked me to write a "My Turn" for the paper, I had no idea what to write about. And I still don't.

Although there are many things that frustrate me, the one thing I keep coming back to is the thing I'm forced to come to everyday if I want to survive: food. If you live on campus like I do, and if you want food under the school's meal plan, you eat at Greenville Dining Hall or the Springs Canteen.

I don't think I'm alone in noticing the air of tension and frustration at each of these places. Unfortunately, in this article I can only ask questions, I have no answers yet. But the questions are worth the asking.

Why are we not allowed to take our backpacks into GDH? I received multiple answers to this question from both staff and non-staff. One reason given for the disallowance of backpacks is that it is a fire marshal's mandate; I've heard this from both staff and non-staff. The other reason I've heard is that many students have been caught stealing food, which they place inside their backpacks. I'm not talking about a few oranges; I'm referring to entire backpacks full of nothing but oranges. (In addition to backpack theft, some students during the 1 pm rush simply sneak in the handicapped door, avoiding the line and paying for their food.)

I have suggestions to both answers. The fire marshal excuse appears weak. I'm not a fire marshal, and I don't know the specifics of the job, but if something as small as a backpack is a fire hazard, then are not chairs fire hazards? What about the tables? Taking the backpacks inside would seem like less of a fire hazard because then they are not stacked up in front of the doors, efficiently blocking the exit. As for the students stealing obscene amounts of food, they should be reported to a Code of Conduct and/or Honor Code violation. Let the Judicial Council handle them for their offense. I think that this would send a clear message to the offenders and would be offenders.

However, I still think the backpack rule should be lifted if it is in place to prevent stealing; we are a school with an Honor Code and this is an apparent contradiction. And if we do leave GDH with a couple of cookies or a hand full of grapes, relax, this pilfering isn't a great crime—we're just trying to get our money's worth.

Another policy is the opening and closing time of the Springs Canteen. The Canteen opens for breakfast at 9:15 am. (According to a posted schedule, the canteen is said to open at 8:30; however, this time refers only to Starbucks, not the grill.) This policy severely angers students coming from their eight o'clock class who expect a sandwich and are then turned down and have to return to their nine o'clock class hungry. This seems strange when the workers themselves are ready for business at 8:45, but have to turn down students because of the policy. Who's in charge of the policy? Who do you need to call to change it? Sodexo Marriott. As you may see, their management is behind much of the internal struggle the food service is facing.

Now for the more mysterious questions.

Why does only one "tray-vator" work? For months only the "tray-vator" to the right of GDH worked (if you face GDH from the front). I asked some staff what was wrong, and they told me a part had broke from the other "tray-vator" and was being replaced that very day. They denied that it was due to staffing problems. When I came in for dinner that night, the other "tray-vator" was not working, and the one to the left was. The cause this time? The right side had broken on the very same day the left side had been repaired. Coincidence? Someone even alluded to the idea that somebody had broken the "tray-vator" on purpose. During lunch two days later, it was the right side that was working again and the left side that was not working. I've tried to reach Marriott during normal business hours for a comment, but I had to leave a message and haven't received any word back from them yet.

So what? A "tray-vator" doesn't work, big deal. But wait. I think all of this is in some way connected. But more questions... Why do some of the GDH staff serve their food with stone faces? It's not something the students have done. From what I've heard from staff and students is that there are not enough workers, and the workers that are there are being run ragged with demands and duties. If that is the case, who is responsible for all the extra work and duties? The management, Sodexo Marriott.

I've heard, again from both students and staff, that the management, while consistently providing generally good food, has cut corners that generally short-change the staff. There are not enough workers, there is not enough money, there are too many jobs and there is too much to do. It's different from years past, and the staff doesn't like it. The stone faces are one of their only ways of communicating this with us.

There are more questions, especially when taking into account that the management may be cutting corners. For example, was the disappearance of ice cream earlier this semester in GDH due to a lack of sales for ice cream served in Springs?

Our school has a seven year contract with Sodexo-Marriott. We have a responsibility as part of the community to find out what is wrong and to ensure that the people working for us at PC are being treated with dignity. "My turn" is letting you know that something may be going wrong; "our turn" is making sure to fix it.

The Bottom Line

Ben Acton

Two weeks ago, it happened. Two weeks ago, a step, an important step, was made in PC's collective journey to understand what the heck this thing called diversity is and why it is important.

Two weeks ago, students shouted and ran down the steps of Neville hall, the center of campus, and joined one of the six fraternities that awaited them at the bottom of those steps. One by one each fraternity took its pledges in, waved its fraternity flag and proclaimed itself to be the best group on campus.

And in the middle of this entire event, it happened. Actually, it didn't happen.

For the first time in a long time (or at least since I have been here) the men of Kappa Alpha did not unveil a symbol that the PC chapter of the fraternity has held especially dear. Although the majority of members appeared at bid day, the Confederate flag was conspicuously absent.

We have all heard the debate over whether "the flag" as it has come to be called, is a symbol of hate or a symbol of heritage, and I do not wish to rehash that debate here in great length. Although I was not present for any of KA's discussions on whether or not to use "the flag" on bid day, I think it is safe to assume that these discussions were not easy ones. Because of the variation in opinion on this issue, I think it is also safe to assume that not everyone agreed with the decision that was ultimately made.

But whichever side of the debate one is or might have been on, the important thing is that the decision not to fly "the flag" shows a great deal of character. By simply talking about the issue amongst themselves, KA showed a commitment to being open, to viewing a potentially volatile and emotional situation through sympathetic eyes, to seeing that one person's heritage might be another person's burden. In short, by taking the time to discern what was best for their fraternity and for PC as a whole, what KA showed was a great deal of integrity.

But that's only the first step. Now comes the hard part, both for the KAs and for the rest of the community.

First, some questions for the KAs: you've done what you think was best, but can you sustain it? Will not flying "the flag" become a new tradition, or will it be a one time thing? Will you be able to explain to people that the decision not to fly "the flag" was made because it was the right thing to do, not because the fraternity felt bullied into it? Will you engage in other opportunities on campus for discussion about issues of diversity of race, gender, religion and sexual orientation?

And for PC: can we show the same type of discernment on issues of diversity as the KAs did in this case? Will we be as able to recognize when something we hold dear might negatively affect others? Will we be willing to listen to points of view we might totally disagree with? Will we be willing to compromise in order to do what is best for the rest of the community? Will we engage in other opportunities on campus for discussion about issues of diversity of race, gender, religion and sexual orientation?

Only time will tell, I guess. But here's hoping that all of us, despite our differences, might come to the table and discuss those issues that need talking about the most. In the process, we will find things we never knew were possible. It can happen.

CIH brings international experience home

NOVEMBER 17, 2000

by Helen Machida
staff writer

Travel around the world in 80 days without leaving PC? Well, that's not exactly the case; however, through the programs of Carrol International House (CIH), the campus is exploring eight countries during the academic school year.

One country a month is examined in order that PC students may absorb a deeper understanding of the world and how it affects them with the help of CIH, the Multicultural Student Union (MSU) and the Student Union Board (SUB).

The beginning of the school year was kicked off with the country of Spain. Activities ranged from painting a Picasso to salsa dancing as well as an authentic dinner consisting of gazpacho, paella and flan.

Dr. Peter Hobbie of the religion department is a "Fellow" of CIH. A Fellow is a faculty or staff member who is welcome to participate in all of CIH's activities throughout the academic year as if they were a resident. Not only does Hobbie and the other "Fellows" attend the various events, they also contribute to the programs. For example, Hobbie delivered the invocation at the Open House celebration of CIH.

Hobbie has expressed his overall approval of CIH, the activities and, especially, the meals. According to Hobbie, partaking in the events is the "next best thing to living there."

The Spanish art project consisted of works from Picasso and Miro. Their masterpieces were cut into squares and distributed to all of the participants. Each participant then painted their square. At their assistance was senior Aaron Collier and Head of the Art Department, Mr. Mark Anderson.

Tara Douce, a Clinton dorm resident and sophomore, took advantage of the opportunity to participate in the project that was open to the whole campus.

"The [art project] was a wonderful way to experience just a taste of life in CIH," Douce said. "It was exciting to watch the small, indistinguishable square that I painted turn into a beautiful picture when added to the work of the other students."

October marked the month of South Africa. One of the programs was a meal cooked by the residents of CIH with the additional help of freshman Tanith Forrester. Some of the dishes were milk tart, pourage puffs and pumpkin fritters.

Alejandra Vicencio, an Amity Scholar from Chile, participated with the preparations and consumption of this festivity.

"I think the South African meal was fun because I cooked," she said. "It turned out to be really good."

Dr. Eric Johnson's psychology class also participated by leading a presentation on the differences of aging in different cultures and countries to tie a program in with the meal.

In addition to formal programming, the enthusiasm of the residents has inspired informal teaching of the various cultures represented within the house. An example of this is long language lessons.

French Amity scholar Jessica Pouget and Susan Masson go rafting with CIH

From Clinton to Spanish and from German to Italian.

At times, these lessons are simply saying "hello" or "good-bye" in passing; at other times there are formal, structured weekly lessons. Junior Ethan Nelms studied abroad in China last semester of his sophomore year.

Although Nelms has no one to converse with on campus, he is able to use his Mandarin to teach interested students such as Vicencio.

"I enjoy [giving lessons] because it gives me the opportunity to go back and review what I learned when I studied abroad," Nelms said. "It's difficult at times because I haven't practiced in so long. It's also hard for [Vicencio] to get a working knowledge of [Mandarin] because she doesn't hear it every day, but I think she's getting an understanding of it and is learning phrases she can use."

CIH is not only a learning center, it is home to some of the foreign exchange students as well as PC students.

"It's awesome," Han-nah Keem of Korea said. "I love this place. Most of all [I love it when] I see the Korean clock and when I open my door, I see the Korean flag!"

To those whose homes are thousands of miles away and those recently returning from abroad, the house has helped to provide a smooth transition by fighting off homesickness and reducing the stress of culture shock.

"[CIH] has helped me a lot," Vincencio said. "It's helped me to not feel homesick because I haven't at all. My friends have helped me to deal with [Clinton] being a small town. That could have been the most difficult thing."

During November, CIH programming is crossing the Asian border to experience Japan. Some of the highlights include a member of the Japanese-American Society speaking about college students in Japan as well as other aspects of the Japanese culture.

Additionally, Biology professor Dr. James Wetzel and his family are contributing by providing an authentic meal, a movie and an introduction to Japanese literature.

Students wanting more information concerning these programs in particular and CIH in general should contact Susan Masson at ext. 3705.

Brie Beall scores on the field, at the piano

by Susannah Miller
staff writer

"She received a concussion freshman year playing flag football. She was crashed against the wall playing indoor soccer. Later, she crashed her bike at the bottom of one of PC's many hills and received a rather nasty scrape on her forehead."

Senior Brie Beall will not soon forget the injuries she sustained doing the things she likes such as participating in intramurals and riding her bike, and many others will not soon forget Beall's contribution to the PC community with her musical talent and friendship.

Beall is a music major from Pasadena, Md. Her instrument is the piano. After graduation, she plans to go to graduate school to work toward a Masters in Music Performance.

Until then, she is president of the PC Choir and a member of Delta Omicron Omicron Fraternity, PC Handbells, Westminster Fellowship and, as indicated, a participant in intramurals.

Beall always enjoys what she does whether it is pitching for her intramural softball team or playing the piano.

"I always tell myself this: do what you love and love what you do," Beall said.

Beall's advisor and teacher, Dr. Nan Kline, has nothing but good things to say about her student.

"The musical gift she possesses has many facets which are essential to the precision and creativity involved in outstanding piano playing," Ellis said.

Beall takes a rare break from playing the piano

"Among these are her musically sensitive ear, her extraordinary sense of rhythm, her tremendous technical control and her virtually infallible memory. With these attributes and her calm and focused demeanor on-stage, she captures and holds the ear and attention of an audience. In essence, she is a born performer who has both the natural ability and the acquired skill to convey the musical passion within her."

In addition to her talent, Beall is a good friend with a unique personality.

Brie has certainly made her mark on campus, in the music department, on the intramural field, but most of all with her friends," senior Rachel Diana, Beall's roommate, said. "She knows how to kick back, have fun and make sure everybody loosens up."

"Brie is not too loud, but not shy...not nosy, but concerned," senior Mary Pat Adams said. "She is the real thing. There's never disappointment in knowing her. She only gets better, and she's tunny as heck."

"I am glad God put Bridget in my life," senior Michael York, Beall's fellow choir member and friend said. "I would do anything for her."

When looking back at her time at PC, Beall said her favorite things have been the "experiences, memories, and friends."

She has at least one more memory to make. She has begun preparation for her senior recital planned for the spring.

It is difficult to describe in words Beall's talent, but senior Rachel Reiff sums it up.

"Her music comes from within," Reiff said. "And anyone, whether they know nothing about music or a great deal about music, can hear this when she plays."

Carroll serves as "mom" for student body

by Leigh Ann Cain
staff writer

If you've been to the Reynolds Health Center, then you know the type of warmth and dedication that head nurse Angela Carroll brings to her job.

Carroll, a native of Clinton, attended Francis Marion University for two years and graduated from the nursing school at MUSC in Charleston. She is now married and has two sons, ages four and two.

Carroll experienced several working environments before coming to PC. She worked for the surgical intensive unit at a hospital in Spartanburg and for the emergency room at Laurens County Hospital.

After having children, Carroll wanted a more stable environment. Her need for change led her to seek the head nurse's position at PC's infirmary.

Before coming to PC, Carroll expected her job to be somewhat boring. However, she has stayed busy since she arrived.

"I've definitely been challenged here," Carroll said. "I have to use my knowledge and skills."

Now in her third year at PC, Carroll's favorite aspect of being the head nurse is that she is able to help people get better and then see them on campus. She enjoys working with students and claims that she needs a bumper sticker reading "PC's MOM."

"She's like a mother to me," senior Amanda Burr, a student worker in the infirmary, said.

Carroll's hobbies include reading, spending time with her family and working part time in the ER.

RHA addresses problems of female housing

by Maura Connelly
staff writer

As the number of freshmen females at PC increases, the number of places for them to live on campus decreases. Soon, dorm life as we know it may have to change.

Out of the 190 freshmen girls that are enrolled in PC this year, many aren't living in freshmen housing. Six girls live in Groves, fifteen in Reynolds, six in the Douglas House, and almost the entire first floor of Smyth. On October 30, the Resident Hall Association (RHA) met to discuss the issue of co-ed housing.

According to Terri Helfrey, vice-president of RHA, a few decisions have been made, but no formal proposals are being made to administration just yet.

First, a few members of RHA will be sitting in on a House Meeting for Carrol International House (CIH). As of now, CIH is the only co-ed residence on campus. The members of RHA will interview the residents of CIH and discuss the pros and cons the residents have with co-ed living.

According to the thoughts expressed by RHA members at their meeting, things seem as though they will work out well if the plan is passed by administration.

As things stand now, the goal of co-ed housing is to eliminate the expense of building new housing facilities. The dorms, however, will only be co-ed by floors, not by room or suite. The plans that are being made now include Barron and Grotnes as being co-ed living. If this does happen, only upperclassmen will be "privileged" enough to live in such housing. This will not only open more space for freshmen girls in upperclassmen female housing, but will also give the residents more of a realistic outlook on "the real world" and prepare them for living responsibly around the opposite sex.

Freshmen will not be invited to live in such housing for many reasons. Among these are the thoughts and regards parents might have on the situation. Another is the responsibility that freshmen may not be ready to handle.

The CIH house meeting which RHA members will attend will not be until around Thanksgiving Break. Therefore, if RHA and its advisors see this change as one that everyone involved will benefit from, the formal presentation of their idea will not be until the beginning of December.

Cross Country runs away with the season

by Jack Carmody
Sports Editor

Saturday, October 28, the cross country team travelled to Greenville, Tenn., to compete in the South Atlantic Conference (SAC) Championships. Both the men's and women's teams had been focusing on this meet all year. All of their training had been geared toward this meet. The men entered the championships with four teams ranked ahead of them, while the girls had three teams ahead of them. Both teams represented PC well at the meet.

The women's course was 5000 meters (3.1 miles) long, consisting of one loop around a large field. The course had several rolling hills, along with one very steep hill. The girls had little room for error, due to the fact that freshman Sara Harris could not compete due to a viral infection. Thus, the women were left with only five runners in the race--the minimum number needed for the team to score.

After the gun, it was not long until freshman phenom Tanith Forrester took the lead, a lead that she would not let go. Forrester won the race with a time of 20:22, a full 20 seconds before the second place finisher. Next for PC was senior Alison Outz, who finished ninth, with a time of 21:25. Sophomore Katie Lenhart was 12th with a time of 21:48. Grace Mitchell finished 18th for PC, while Heather Sherer was 23rd. The women's performance was good enough to earn them a third place finish in the conference. Forrester was named Runner of the Year, in addition to Freshman of the Year. She was also named to the All-SAC first team. Outz was named to the All-SAC second team for the second straight year, while first-year runner Katie Lenhart was also named to the second team.

The men's course was 8000 meters (5 miles) long. The men had to do two loops around the field, plus an extra loop around a soccer field. Senior Zach Braden, even though he had to be carried off the finish line from exhaustion, still won the race, with a time of 28:59. Freshman Drew English also had an impressive showing, finishing fifth in 29:50. Next to cross the line for PC was sophomore Jack Carmody, finishing 20th with a time of 31:15. Junior Thomas German finished next, with a time of 31:17. Freshman Justin Vosburgh finished 32nd. As the results were tallied, PC found themselves in a tie for second with Catawba. PC won the tie breaker, as their sixth runner, Lee Bugay, finished ahead of Catawba's sixth runner. Braden took home Runner of the Year honors, while being named first team All-SAC. English was also named to the first team.

"We had high expectations coming into the year for conference," said assistant coach Mike Rosolino. "But both teams ran better than we expected them too."

The men's and women's cross country teams wrapped up their seasons November 4 at the NCAA Division II Southeast Regional Championships held in Greensboro, N.C.

women ran 6000 meters, while the men ran 10,000. The race was run in a very hilly golf course in Bryan Park.

The women finished fifth in their race. The highlight for PC was Forrester, who finished third in the race with a time of 24:46. She narrowly missed qualifying for nationals, as the top two individual finishers earned a trip to the Division II National Championships. She was named to the All-Southeast Region first team. Outz finished 22nd, capping off her impressive collegiate career. Lenhart finished 31st, while Sherer and Mitchell were 34th and 35th respectively.

The men ran well enough to finish seventh in the region. Braden finished 13th in his last race, with a time of 36:14, good enough to earn him All-Region honors. English finished 18th, while German finished 45th. Senior Jonathan Todd also ran well, finishing 55th.

"We made some really big strides this season," said Rosolino. "Hopefully this is just the start of better things to come."

the third and final game The Blue Hose were led by outside hitter Tamosaitis, the South Atlantic Conference Freshman of the Year, who tallied a match-high 21 kills. SAC Player of the Year Walker had 13 kills and 12 digs.

Haire also added to the win when she dished out a match-high 25 assists. Blue Hose senior outside hitter Rachel Bishop from Summerville, S.C., played in her last home match in a PC uniform as she tallied four kills and five total blocks.

The Presbyterian College Blue Hose defeated the Patriots' of Francis Marion University in Florence, S.C., on Halloween by a score of 15 to 7, 15 to 4 and 15 to 5. Presbyterian College's win put a damper on Francis Marion's Annual Senior Night in front of 70 of their fans. The non-conference win for the Blue Hose was the eleventh win in the last 14 matches and the third straight loss for the home team, Patriots' of Francis Marion.

PC's volleyball team was led by Walker, who tallied 16 kills, seven digs and one service ace. Tamosaitis registered 11 kills in the match. Haire and Maisch had 17 and 12 assists respectively.

PC Volleyball wins two out of three to end season

Presbyterian College Lady Blue Hose volleyball team finished their season by winning their last two out of three games.

The volleyball team ended its season on the road on Nov. 3 against Emory University. PC was defeated 15 to 1 in the first game, 15 to 10 in the second and 15 to 4 in the final game in Atlanta to finish this year's season.

Junior Aisha Walker and freshman Debbie Tamosaitis led the match with six each of PC's 20 kills in the three games. Tamosaitis also led the match with five digs on defense followed by freshman setter Kellie Haire with four and Rikki Owens and Jessica Maisch with three each. Haire also led the match with 12 sets and Maisch contributed to the rest of PC's sets with seven. The loss dropped PC's record to a final 21 wins and 12 losses for the year.

Presbyterian College's volleyball team breezed past the Lady Braves of University of North Carolina-Pembroke on Nov. 1 in the last conference match of the season by a score of 15 to 8, 15 to 10 and 15 to 5. Wednesday's game was also the last home game and Senior Night 2000 for the Lady Blue Hose volleyball team.

The Blue Hose got off to a slow start in front of a crowd of approximately 100 people in Templeton Gymnasium on the PC campus. PC fell behind 8-5 early in the first game, but the Blue Hose rallied with a 10 point unanswered run to win the game by a score of 15 to 8. PC used the momentum to their advantage in the second of three games by jumping to a commanding 13 to 3 lead. The Lady Braves of UNC-Pembroke fought back with a seven point run on clutch serving to bring the score to 13 to 10, but the attack came a little too late as PC closed the door on the second game of the match with two serves to win the game 15 to 10.

PC won the match by a sound 10 to 5 score in

PC wins last Bronze Derby Game at Bailey Memorial, improves overall record to 8-2

Presbyterian College redshirt freshman wideout Terry Meng (Campobello, SC) caught his second TD catch of the day with :26 seconds remaining to give the Blue Hose a 34-27 win over Newberry College in the annual Bronze Derby Classic Saturday afternoon.

The game was in doubt down to the last play as Newberry fought back after every Blue Hose score to keep the game close.

PC took a 21-13 lead into the fourth quarter only to see Newberry's junior fullback Shawn Lornes (W. Columbia, SC) scored from six yards out to cut the lead to 21-19 with 9:54 remaining. Newberry missed the two-point conversion as Indian quarterback senior Dustin Coats' (W. Columbia, SC) pass was deflected by PC's junior defensive back Max Grant (Ridgeville, SC) in the endzone.

The Blue Hose took advantage and marched 63 yards on 18 plays as junior halfback Paul Freeman (Lawrenceville, GA) scored on a three-yard run to give PC a 27-19 lead with 2:15 remaining. On the ensuing kickoff, Newberry's senior fullback Vic Gilmore (Denmark, SC) ran 97 yards for a TD to pull the Indians to within 27-25 with :58 remaining.

Coats found sophomore running back Chad Jackett (Swansea, SC) in the endzone for a two-point conversion to tie the game at 27-27.

PC's junior quarterback Todd Cunningham (Irmo, SC), who struggled for most of the day, stepped up with 1:51 remaining and led the Blue Hose on a 73-yard drive on eight plays and found wideout Meng for a 17-yard TD reception to give PC a 34-27 lead.

The game was still in jeopardy with :20 seconds remaining when PC's junior defensive tackle Keon Talbert (Greenville, SC) sacked Coats, who fumbled on the Newberry 24 yard line and Blue Hose sophomore defensive end Nacomma Maxwell (Hartwell, GA) recovered the fumble to end the last Indian threat.

Special teams was the name of the game early for the Indians as junior wideout Sentell Peake (Union, SC) returned a 46-yard punt for a TD to give Newberry a 7-0 lead at the 7:52 of the first quarter. After a Cunningham to Meng touchdown, Newberry's senior defensive back Tyrone Rouse (Edgefield, SC) picked off one of four Cunningham passes on the day and returned it 81 yards for a TD and a 13-7 Indian lead in the first quarter.

PC came back in the second quarter as Cunningham ran for a 11-yard TD run and found senior wideout Travis Smith (Dublin, GA) for a 88-yard TD strike to put PC ahead 21-13 at the half. PC dominated the game on offense, outgaining the Indians 291 to 104 in the first half.

For the game, PC gained 505 yards of total offense while holding the Indians to 191 yards.

PC was led by Smith who caught eight passes for 169 yards and one TD while Freeman led the ground attack with 64 yards and one TD on 16 carries.

PC gained 230 yards on the ground on the day while Cunningham passed for 275 yards and three TD's on 17-of-32 passes, but was picked off four times. Newberry was led by Gilmore who ran for 81 yards on 19 carries including 71 in the second half while Coats passed for 77 yards on seven-of-13 completions, but fumbled five times.

Presbyterian improves to 8-2 overall and 6-1 in the SAC while Newberry falls to 4-7 overall and 1-6 in the league. The 6-1 mark for the Blue Hose is the best league record since the 1998 team also went 6-1. PC's 8-2 overall mark is the best record by winning percentage since 1979 when the Blue Hose went 10-1. Today's game was the last Bronze Derby game on PC's home field, Bailey Memorial. PC plans to build a new stadium that will be ready by the 2002 season. The Blue Hose own a 26-10-1 mark on their home field versus Newberry dating back to the 1928 season.

after the snow storm last winter that the school did not own a four-wheel drive vehicle. In case of a medical emergency or bad weather, the school needed something in which to transport students to the hospital or around campus.

Also, Public Safety is responsible for towing golf carts, cones and other things around campus. They were borrowing personal trucks and other vehicles from their staff for jobs such as these.

"We needed something with four-wheel drive, something that the back would put down on so we could carry the cones we have to put out sometimes and something that could tow something," Mulhall said. "So we ended up looking at a SUV."

Public Safety officer Jackie Turner agreed that the school was in need of the new vehicle.

"The weather was the big thing," Turner said. "[We needed the SUV] in case we had another bad storm, heavy rains, or that type thing and also for the extra space to carry different cargo."

Mulhall went to a state purchasing agency to get the price the state would pay for the type of vehicle the school needed.

Because PC is not a state agency, Mulhall took the price and presented it to different dealerships. After six months of shopping, a dealership in Augusta, Ga., offered the school the type of vehicle it was looking for with all the needed equipment and at the lowest possible price.

The SUV that the school purchased is a 2001 Ford Explorer XLS 4x4. It came equipped with a light bar, alloy and takedown lights, a trailer tow package and a new Motorola 1225 40-watt 20-channel radio.

Mulhall assures students that the purchase was a well-thought out and worthwhile process.

"If students are worried about their money, I couldn't imagine us finding a better deal than what we did," Mulhall said.

In addition to the purchase of a new vehicle for Public Safety, this year the College has also bought two other vehicles: a used 15 passenger van for general College use and a new van for SVS.

All in all, Morris Galloway, vice-president of finance and administration, predicts that this year the campus will receive 5 or 6 new vehicles.

"For capital purchases such as these, we try to make them when we have a surplus," Galloway said. "And we had one last year."

In response to students' concerns about their tuition money, particularly with the purchase of the SUV for Public Safety, Galloway stressed the caution with which the college makes purchases.

"We're careful about how we spend money," Galloway said. "This was the least expensive way to meet the needs that [Public Safety] had."

someone from flying a certain flag, and I don't think that we can. I requested of the president of KA that they not fly it, and we [had] an understanding."

However, up until the KA pledges rushed down the steps of Neville, there was some concern that the flag might come out. A group of faculty and students were prepared to stand against the flag if it had come out.

Instead, KA waived their fraternity flag and a South Carolina state flag as they welcomed their new pledges.

"We made a mistake last year, and we're not going to make the same mistake this year," senior and KA member Jay Biber said at the time.

Ingram also stated his hope that KA's decision not to fly the flag would become a new tradition.

"Hopefully now, this is not just a one-year honoring of the dignity of other people, but that this will become institutionalized," he said. "This will become part of the fraternity itself."

Changes proposed for alcohol policy, enforcement

by Hank Coleman
News Editor

The Student Government Association (SGA) and the Alcohol Advisory Committee are discussing changing the College's alcohol policy. The changes stem from requests that have been made by Presbyterian College President Dr. John Griffith and the College's Board of Trustees.

"It is time that we take a close look at our policies and procedures related to alcohol and social activities on campus," Griffith said. "This is an ongoing issue and requires the attention of a variety of perspectives. We should look at this matter as a means of indentifying new or revised approaches to assuring that PC is a safe and dignified environment."

Griffith added that the Residence Life Staff has spent a great deal of time looking at changes that need to be made in the policy.

"The Alcohol Advisory Committee, which is comprised of both students and faculty, met on October 31 and sent several proposals to the Student Life Committee," Director of Resident Life Mike Rosolino said.

Rosolino mentioned that the committee proposed several changes to PC's alcohol policy. They suggested eliminating the current fine of $50 for the first violation in exchange for 15 hours of community service. They also recommended changing the $100 fine for a second violation to 30 hours of community service. The Alcohol Advisory Committee also recommended that the fraternities on campus should have a private security guard on site at all of their parties.

Rosolino added that the proposal was tabled at the next level of approval, the Student Life Committee, until further discussions and research could be conducted.

"They wanted the input of SGA, the Interfraternal Council (IFC), Panhellenic and some other faculty members and committees," Rosolino said. "If they pass the changes, they would send the issue on to the faculty as a recommendation, and the faculty would have to vote to approve the changes in order for them to become a new policy."

He added that since the measure has been tabled by the Student Life Committee, no decision will be made this semester.

"The policy might be changed late next semester after a new director of Greek Life has been hired," Rosolino said.

Dean of Students Joe Nixon added that the College has narrowed its search for the Greek Life director down to three candidates, who were on campus for two days this week for final interviews. He said that the school hopes to have the position filled by the beginning of next semester.

"We see the new director of Greek Life as providing Greeks with support that they need from an administration standpoint," Rosolino said. "For the first semester after the new director is hired, he or she will conduct an in-depth study of the Greek and social life of the College as well as the school's alcohol policy."

Rosolino added that currently every single fraternity violates the Fraternal Information and Programing Group's (FIPG) guidelines for managing alcohol and injury related risk. Every fraternity is required to have insurance, and that insurance is based on FIPG guidelines. Every fraternity is required by FIPG to check IDs, have parties with a strict guest list only, not supply alcohol to anyone, have sober brothers at the party at all times, have non-alcoholic drinks available, have a security guard present at all parties, etc.

"Things will start to change when the new director of Greek Life takes over next year," Alpha Sigma Phi Vice-President Blair Sherwood said. "I see the new director forcing all of the fraternities to follow the FIPG guidelines and the school's alcohol policy. It will make fraternity court a more exclusive environment and will take a lot of the responsibility and liability off of the fraternities' shoulders."

The SGA has also seen the need to address changes that need to be made to the school's alcohol policy. After reports of a female having been taken to the hospital for treatment of alcohol poisoning, SGA President Tanisha Jenkins reported the national statistics of binge drinking on American college campuses in her November 3 President's Column.

"Alcohol is now a factor in 40 percent of all academic problems and 28 percent of all college dropouts according to a recent Harvard University study," Jenkins wrote in her column. "Students who drink five or more drinks in one sitting are more likely to damage property, have trouble with authorities, miss classes, have hangovers and experience injuries than those who do not binge drink."

SGA Secretary Mitchell Spearman said that SGA has not yet formally discussed making recommendations about a new alcohol policy but that they will most likely discuss it in the upcoming months.

"Students should read pages 84 through 86 of the Knapsack Student Handbook," Spearman said. "They will see how outdated and unenforced the current policies are. Now is the time to work on a policy in which all members of the College community can support and be happy with."

Next semester a memorial will be erected between Jacobs Hall and Harrington-Peachtree Center dedicated to the memories of former PC students and the armed forces.

According to Lieutenant Colonel J. Trankovich Jr., professor of military science, the memorial will "recognize the graduates of Presbyterian College who were members of the armed forces and died in service to their country."

The memorial is a combined effort of the Presbyterian College Alumni Association and the R.O.T.C.

Alumni Association.

Three years ago, it was brought to these groups' attention that there was a need for a memorial of this type. A committee was formed to steer this effort, and planning on the memorial began soon thereafter.

The design of the memorial consists of many aspects. A "Walkway of Honor" will and will begin from the street beside the plaza and will end in the open area between Jacobs Hall and Harrington-Peachtree Center. At the end of the walkway there

Change to SNS format might attract more people

Recently, the Chaplain's office announced that PC would have no more Sunday Night Services for the rest of the semester and possibly the rest of the year due to lack of student participation.

Two years ago, when two students proposed the idea of SNS, they wanted a more contemporary worship service on campus. They wanted a service that would attract students looking for a less traditional service than local churches provided on Sunday mornings. At first, SNS was a success. Most weeks different professors or College administrators spoke to a small, but dedicated crowd of students. The service also included music and liturgies by classmates and friends.

Most importantly, the service was planned and run primarily by a team of students who knew what spiritual needs other students needed to fill on campus.

This year's SNS services have been different. They are run more primarily out of the Chaplain's office. Professors and administrators no longer speak about their personal experiences. Often, the services are liturgies with no sermon or homily.

Can we have professors and administrators speak at SNS again? Students enjoy seeing the pros and administrators in a different light. If we are going to require that our employees be a member of a Christian church, let's ask them to share that witness with the their students and each other.

Some say that students get so many messages that a service without one is most effective. However, the young people at PC and of America aren't going to stop hearing lectures or seeing commercial ads or reading magazines, so why should they stop hearing the Word of God? Doesn't the Christian population at PC feel the need to add their thoughts? Being silent doesn't speak very loudly in our technology-savvy world.

In addition, publicity for SNS has not been as prominent and effective this year as it was the past two years. Although not the fault of anyone in particular, we get cards in our boxes explaining the services the Mondays after they happen. We never see the posters that we saw around campus last year or read of the services in FYI.

We here at "The Blue Stocking" recognize that the lack of attendance is not any one person's fault. Perhaps students have not stepped up to fill the void left by the worship leaders of last year. As last year's leaders became more busy with upper-level classes or graduated altogether, no one ensured that the care of SNS would be passed down along to other students.

Please do not let a worship service like SNS die. We urge interested students to get in touch with Greg Henley and express how SNS might be more successful. We urge students to begin planning the services again with only helpful suggestions from the chaplain's office. We also urge the Chaplain's office to continue the SNS tradition into next semester. Most of all we urge everyone to go to SNS and see what an hour together of worship can do for us all.

Student Government Finance Committee Report

The SGFC is a newly formed committee that oversees spending of a portion of the student activity fee. The committee is composed of three students, one professor and a representative from the business administration office. Moreover, all decisions made by the SGFC are taken before the Student Senate for approval. Most importantly, the committee gives students a say in how a portion of their money can be spent on campus.

This semester, SGFC has had two trials and heard requests from three organizations. The following is a brief description of the requests and the decision made by SGFC: *Multicultural Student Union- Requested funds to help pay for the Haunted House. All proceeds were to go to a charity. The SGFC granted $225 for this project. The Haunted House was a great success.

* Students for Environmental Education- Requested funds to buy 20 new, durable recycling bins to place around campus. The SGFC granted $1700 for the recycling bins. Look for the bins around campus and remember to recycle.

* Residence Hall Association- Requested funds to help finance the Faculty Sleepover. The money was to be used towards Acoustic Cafe and the late night trip to Waffle House. The SGFC granted $300 for the sleepover. We hope everyone had fun.

* Multicultural Student Union- Requested funds to help pay for the Reggae Band during Diversity Week. The SGFC granted $300 to help MSU with the festivities.

We encourage all organizations to apply for funds. To receive an application contact T.J. Ackerly at 833-7500 or have your Student Senator pick one up at the senate meetings. The applications are always due the last Thursday of the month, and hearings take place on the first Thursday of every month.

Class of 2000 alumnus urges PC to get outside the "bubble"

Dear Editor,

Who would have thought that I would be sitting in Africa reading The Blue Stocking? Well, thanks to Gene Goodwyn, a 1963 graduate of PC, I am! For those of you who don't know, I packed my bags and headed to teach in Kenya, Africa after graduation. Not through an organization, not with anyone I knew, not knowing quite what to expect. Oh yes, life can certainly throw you a curve ball from time to time, but the important thing to remember is to keep focused and swing! I am writing this letter to give a boost of confidence to those who are thinking about going abroad or even considering moving abroad for mission work, teaching positions, etc. Rachel Reiff wrote an article that addressed the sacrifices people make to receive an education. Kudos to you, Rachel, for your article!

During my time here I have come to see that there is one thing that we need to realize as a whole: we need to realize how extremely lucky we really are for what we have.

PC bubble? America bubble? I am not too sure which holds more truth.

We see the commercials, we hear the statistics, and we read about the troubles that so many face. Have we become so numb to it that we are able to sit back and do nothing? I was once that person that thought that I could never make a difference in the life of someone abroad. I am here to tell you that you may very well be that person that God has called.

When I pass school children walking home from school at 5 in the afternoon, I stop and pick them up. Why? Because it can take them two hours to walk home, their lives are at risk due to the animals and because they make that sacrifice every day to get an education. When I see little ones on the side of the road sniffing glue to get high and to fill their hunger needs, I say a prayer. Why? Because their parents can't afford to send them to school or to feed them. When I see an orphan begging for food, I give what I can. Why? Because their parents never received the education on AIDS prevention that may have prevented them having to leave 8 kids without a family of their own. It is the little things in life that matter the most.

Guys, it is a tough world for some. Yet we have the nerve to complain about the food in GDH. It's time to realize how fortunate we really are.

I am not writing this to lecture or to say that you are not doing what you should be doing if you don't go abroad. I am writing this because I had people in my life who had faith in me and were able to say go for it. Life is so short. PC is a safe haven for many that have that desire to serve, but sometimes we are too scared of what we will be missing or what we will leave behind. It will still be there when you get back, the people you love will still love you, and the memories and insight you will gain will never compare to the things you "missed."

Live the life that God has called you to live and experience all that life has to offer. I promise you will never regret it.

In Christ,
Lee Davis

SGA urges students to show spirit, clean up

Dear Editor,

As you are aware, the Student Government Association and Senate work very diligently to serve as the voice of the student body. When SGA is given a challenge, we work very hard to resolve the issue. The signs around campus are testament to our hard work: the television in Springs, the fax machine in the mail room, campus lighting and newspapers in Springs and GDH are some of our many accomplishments this year.

Now it is time for the student body's help. Recently, the SGA Senate met and discussed several complaints that we had received from the Administration, i.e., Maintenance, Housekeeping and Public Safety. These complaints centered around a lack of care student had for Harrington-Peachtree building during evening and late-night hours. Apparently Housekeeping has had to clean up food, sweep up cake and mess and work doubly hard just to compensate for the 24 hour access to the building. In fact, some administrators have discussed either closing the building down in the evening or having to hire more staff to upkeep the building.

The SGA Senate voted to allow the Secretary to write a letter on their behalf to encourage student pride not just in H-P, but in the entire College community. The Senate also expressed concern over this trash problem. On behalf of the Senate, I encourage all students to clean up their own mess; not to leave the classrooms dirty and to be proud of our beautiful campus. I mean, after 120 years, it would be terrible to have a messy school!

Hopefully, this will be the final discussion of this matter. I am sure that all students will throw their trash away, clean up spills and encourage others to do so. SGA and the Senate need your assistance in proving to the administration that we as students, can keep our end of the bargain.

In the PC Spirit,
Mitchell Spearman
Secretary of the Student Government Association
Secretary of the Senate

The Bottom Line
Ben Acton

Can you believe it? Another semester gone by already! We're just two weeks removed from Thanksgiving and have just two more weeks to go until Christmas. It's an exciting time, or is it?

Unfortunately, for the past two weeks, I have been hard pressed to define my life as "exciting." I have been tired, irritable and cranky. I have holed myself up in my room, trying to complete the assignments I should have done before Thanksgiving break. Instead of decking the halls, I have wanted to deck a few of the people who have gotten in my way during this time.

I bet many students have probably felt the same way—it seems that everyone came back from Thanksgiving break with a "deer in the headlights" look due to the sudden realization that a) there is a seemingly endless stream of meetings, papers, projects, seminars, presentations and tests to be completed before the end of the semester and b) the end of the semester is now. As a result, stress levels sky-rocket; frustration, crankiness and/or apathy sinks in and a general malaise spreads over campus.

To top matters off, there are an even darker clouds on the horizon—the dreaded FINAL EXAMS!!!!!! Now I have not usually worried about exams for two reasons. One, I figure if I haven't studied it for a whole semester why break the streak and pull an all-nighter, and two, after the weeks preceding exams, my brain and body cease to function at full capacity, allowing me only to communicate in words like "huh", "whazzat", "yes" and "no." (Not much help on true-false questions.)

All of the above is simply meant to provide evidence as to why they call it "dead week." The College may not be dead, but you feel that you are or that certain professors (or students who refuse to turn in their work on time and just keep complaining) should be.

It's ironic then, that this is a time to be thinking not about death, but about life. If the Thanksgiving and Christmas season is about anything, it is about the discovery of life, love and hope in even the darkest of times. Unfortunately, we don't always do a good job of remembering that. We may not take advantage of things PC does to remind us that the season is not about testing ourselves but about letting go in the expectation of a new life, a new truth.

In that sense, then maybe even final exams can be an expression of the Christmas spirit if we can just slow down enough to take the time to reflect on what lies before us. If we can not be so focused on where we have to go that we miss out on where we are, maybe these times would be easier than they are now. If we let go of the stress we have, maybe we can find something more lasting to hold on to, like each other.

That's my Christmas wish. What's yours?

Patrick Center dedicated, Patrick remembered

DECEMBER 8, 2000

by Doodle Harris
managing editor

The only PC building without white marble columns out front is officially in use.

This new $1.67 million facility, The Patrick Center, was dedicated on Tuesday, November 14. It is located at the rear of Smith Administration Building and houses the financial aid, admissions and alumni affairs offices.

"For the first time in our history, we have a facility that is specifically designed to welcome prospective PC students and PC graduates - an interesting concept," Presbyterian College President John Griffith said.

Despite the lack of columns, the Patrick Center does have technology-savvy offices, three guest suites, a President's Dining Room, a fountain, a courtyard and multiple display cases used to show off PC memorabilia. Paintings and drawings by South Carolina artists decorate the lobby and reception area.

PC's dean of admissions, Mr. Dana Paul, expressed thanks for the new building.

"We here in admissions have a saying that you never have a second chance to make a first impression; first impressions are important to admission offices," Paul said. "What a wonderful impression the Patrick Center will make to prospective students. The Patrick Center speaks wonders about the quality, about the tradition, about the students of Presbyterian College."

Randy Randall, director of alumni affairs, echoed Paul's sentiments.

"This is a marvelous place to work. We sure do appreciate it," Randall said.

After referring to the spacious guest suites, Randall continued, "Despite any rumor you may have heard, I have not once been caught taking my afternoon nap there...yet."

Although the fourteenth of November was a day for the PC board of Trustees and other honored guests to tour the new facility, it was also a day to remember Joseph Patrick, the man for whom the building was named.

Pat Patrick, son of Joe Patrick as well as a member of the College's Board of Trustees, spoke of his father's admiration of PC.

"He loved Presbyterian College," Patrick said. "This place meant the world to him. He could never have come here were it not for the generosity of others, and he never forgot that fact, which made him want to give back so that others could be as fortunate as he."

Joe Patrick graduated from PC in 1937. He continued his life as a teacher, a school principal and a member of the U.S. army. Before his death, he also served on PC's Board of Trustees and Board of Visitors.

Patrick's pastor from Columbia Presbyterian Church, Rev. Hugh Ward spoke of Patrick's character at the dedication.

"He was one of the most genuine and Christian human beings," Ward said.

In remembering Joe, Ward prayed, "May all who come through this place sense his spirit...may we too be reminded that we can achieve excellence if we care more than we ever thought was wise, if we dream more than we ever thought was practical, if we expect more of ourselves than we ever thought possible."

After Patrick's death in 1992 on a golf course, his wife, Jerri, and his children decided to honor him by donating the money for the Patrick Center.

"I believe this facility was the brainchild of Jerri Patrick," Griffith said. "She recognized the college's need for a place for alumni to gather...She probably came to this conclusion as a result of a lot of time of coming to campus with her husband, Joe."

In addition to the Patrick Family foundation's donations, Griffith also added a list of generous contributors to the Patrick Center that included current and former members of the PC Board of Trustees as well as PC students themselves.

"It was interesting last spring when the senior class had to decide on their senior gift," Griffith said. "They got excited about this project, so they raised the money for the fountain in the courtyard. This is truly a community gift."

While the Board of Trustees were on campus, they also participated in other PC celebrations. The evening of the dedication, PC announced that retiring Board of Trustee member James Spradly was being named an emeritus trustee. At the same ceremony, PC awarded former trustee Hal Harris, Jr., with an honorary degree of Doctor of Commercial Science. The following day, the trustees witnessed another dedication of a PC building, CHH.

In addition to the Board of Trustees, several people were in attendance for the Patrick Center dedication service. Patrick's wife, two children, three of his five grandchildren, first cousins from Colorado and former PC roommate made the trek to Clinton for the day.

"It's been nearly nine years since Joe Patrick died," Pat Patrick said. "At his funeral, as at most services, we heard so many wonderful things of life and the resurrection. Although we all certainly believe those expressions of love and faith, we are all human, and as humans, it is hard to feel celebratory in the ordinary sense of the word at such an occasion. But today is different. It is a day of celebration that our family has been looking forward to for a long time. It's a real privilege to be able to celebrate effectively the life of a loved one years after they're gone."

Mr. Ron Allen, chairman of the PC board of trustees introduces Jerri Patrick at the dedication service for the Patrick Center.

will be a "Wall of Honor," which will feature the names of the graduates of Presbyterian College who died while serving the United States in the armed forces.

Another element that will be part of the memorial is the College seal. This part of the memorial will be surrounded by benches, providing a place for meditation and relaxation.

Efforts to raise funds for this project are already underway.

"We have already received a $50,000 donation," Lt. Trankovich said.

Everyone is encouraged to participate in this effort.

Although the exact date has yet to be set for the revealing of the monument, Lt. Trankovich assured the school that the event will be special.

"We will have a first-class dedication!" he said.

"There is a lot of support for (the memorial)," he added. "It is long overdue. I really think that this is a magnificent thing, and I really hope that they can have this up sometime soon."

More information concerning the construction and dedication of the memorial will be available in the upcoming months.

Senior Blake McGaha provides leadership, service for PC

by Anne Sullivan
staff writer

From the day Blake McGaha stepped onto the PC campus as a freshman, he has been actively involved in all aspects of PC life.

His many activities and honors include a two-term presidency of Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity and membership in the Judicial Council, ROTC, the political science honors society, the political science club and SVS.

But despite all these honors, McGaha's greatest accomplishment at PC has been the friendships he has made.

"I am most proud of the lifelong friendships I have built here at PC," McGaha said. "I have developed so many great relationships that I will cherish for life."

After graduating, McGaha plans to attend law school and eventually enter the Judge Advocate General (JAG) program through the United States Army.

When asked what he would miss most about PC, he replied, "I am definitely going to miss my friends. I understand the natural tendency to branch out after college, but I hope to remain close with all of my friends."

However, McGaha said there were some things he will not miss about PC.

"[I will least miss,] besides GDH, the lack of administration to really listen to the students' concerns and complaints [and] fight for the students when the City of Clinton tries to impede our college experience," he said.

The most important lesson McGaha will take away from PC will be that of self-discovery.

"PC has taught me so much about myself," he said. "I have grown and matured while here and I thank PC for that, especially those people who have been involved in every aspect of my life."

McGaha's advice for those of us who still have a year or so to go is to have no regrets.

"Live your life to the fullest each and every day; make every second count," he said. "College is the greatest time of your life...do all you can and as much as you can. You only get four years."

Blair Sherwood, McGaha's fraternity brother, roommate and friend indicated that McGaha has had a great impact on PC.

"Blake likes to talk about all the wonderful gifts that PC has given him, but he often forgets to mention all that he has done for our community," Sherwood said. "He is the most humble person I know. Whether you have known Blake since your first day of school or this is your first time hearing of him, Blake has probably enhanced your college experience in some way with all that he does. It has been a privilege to befriend him and I consider it an honor to have him as a role model in my life."

Doodle's fail-proof method for passing all your finals

1. Spread all of your textbooks and notebooks across the desk and couch in your room, creating neat piles of the materials you used in each class. Make sure the materials are in chronological order.
2. Create a data base on your computer, dividing your next few days into hour intervals. Assign each hour that you are not eating or sleeping a subject to study after calculating each final's importance and the amount of time it will take to be fully prepared for that final. Be sure to include a couple of hours for relaxing.
3. While you're at it, calculate both your semester GPA and your overall GPA for every possible combination of grades you could get this semester.
4. Call your mother and tell her how hard you are working to prepare for your finals.
5. Call your friends in your sociology classes and ask to borrow their notes from the day you missed a month ago. While you have them on the phone, complain about your professor and ask if they want to grab something to eat.
6. Run to Wal-Mart to purchase a Christmas present for your brother and get that out of the way so it won't nag you when you really need to be studying.
7. Run to Bi-Lo to stock up on all the food items you'll need to stay up late and study: coffee, ice cream, coffee, nachos, cheese dip and coffee.
8. Take your books to H-P to find an empty room so that you can study in total peace and quiet. Before you study, however, check your e-mail to make sure no one e-mailed you last minute instructions or hints for your finals.
9. When it's time for the exam, feel confident that you spent every hour studying as hard as possible.

Movie Review:

How the Grinch stole Christmas

by Ginny Hrushka, staff writer

Although Ron Howard's "The Grinch" does not follow the original Dr. Seuss storyline exactly, it's fairly close and by adding to the story, adds depth to the characters. Emotional history is shown, such as the explanation of why the Grinch's heart was "ten times too small," and gains the audience's sympathy for the Grinch.

Jim Carrey, who is suited for his role as the Grinch, is what really makes the Grinch and Whoville have life. His ability to change his voice and contour his face add to the Grinch's eerie presence. The makeup and special effects are what makes Whoville come to life. From the Grinch's yellow eyes to the Who's "noses" to the Grinch's sleigh, the special effects are superb.

About halfway through the movie, it does become a bit lagging, but the end is worth the patience of sitting through the slow section. Although there are a few of subtle sexual innuendos, "The Grinch" is overall a kid's movie for kids of all ages.

Men's basketball gaining impressive record with a solid start

by Jack Carmody
sports editor

The men's basketball team has gotten off to a solid start this season. They have an impressive 4-2 overall record as of last Friday.

The team returns four starters from last year's squad, in guards Kevin Campbell, Chuck Rayford, and forwards Jeff Whittle and D.J. Humphries. In October, Humphries received preseason honorable mention for the Division II All-American team, announced by Street & Smith's College Basketball Magazine. Humphries was also named to the preseason All-South Atlantic Conference (SAC) first team. Sophomore Chuck Rayford, SAC Freshman of the Year last year, joined Humphries on the team.

In their first regular season game, PC took on Allen University. The team came away with their first win of the season, defeating Allen 80-67. Both teams shot over 50 percent from the field in the first half, as the Blue Hose took a 45-32 lead going into halftime. PC's lead never got below double digits. Rayford scored a career high 33 points to lead the team. Sophomore center Rod Isom added 12.

Next PC traveled to Spartanburg to take on the University of South Carolina at Spartanburg (USCS) Rifles. USCS had a 35-32 lead to start the second half. However, the Rifles started the second half on a 9-2 run. USCS had a 62-56 with 5:05 left in the game, until PC scored 7 unanswered points, making the score 63-62. USCS tied the score at 66-66 with just three seconds left. However, on the inbound pass, Humphries was fouled. He made one of two free throws to give PC the lead. Four more PC free throws iced the game for the Blue Hose, 71-66.

Over Thanksgiving break, PC hosted the Peach Belt/SAC Clash Tournament. PC was 1-1 in the tourney.

They played the University of South Carolina (USC) at Aiken first. Both teams were streaky in the first half. PC opened with a 11-1 lead in the first three minutes. USC-Aiken answered with a 23-7 run of their own. PC had a 33-30 lead at halftime. The Pacers led by as many as ten points in the second half; however, PC went on a 16-6 run to end the second half. Isom's two free throws with 19 seconds to play tied the game at 58-58, forcing overtime. Rayford's 10 of 11 shooting from the free throw line in overtime helped earn PC the victory, 73-70. Rayford led the team with 23 points. Isom added 15.

In the second tournament game, PC took on Lander University. Lander shot 65.2% from the field, to beat the Blue Hose 80-65. PC cut the lead to as few as five points in the second half, but Lander went on a 10-2 run to lengthen the lead. Rayford had 17 points to lead the Blue Hose. Campbell added 10, while Humphries, Isom, and Jeff Whittle had nine points.

On November 27, Anderson travelled to Clinton to take on PC. The Blue Hose took a 13-6 lead to start the game. The game was tied 25-25 at the half. PC had the lead 53-51 with 5:55 remaining in the game, but that would be their last. After Anderson took the lead, Rayford hit a layup to tie the game at 61-61. However, three Trojan free throws gave them the game. Rayford was once again the leading scorer, as he tallied 16. Humphries added 15 points and 15 rebounds to the cause.

PC made their way to Savannah, Georgia on November 29 to take on Armstrong Atlantic State University. PC fell behind by as many as 10 points in the second half. However, they made their next five shots to take a 63-57 lead. PC never let up. Armstrong had a chance to tie the game as time expired, but their three pointer missed the mark. PC took away another victory 75-73. Rayford went for 22, while freshman Andrew Dellinger had a career high 16 points, including four of five from three point land.

Women's team playing top form b-ball already

by Jack Carmody
sports editor

The PC women's basketball team looks to be in top form, even though the season has barely begun.

The team returns three starters from last year's team that had an overall record of 28-2. The starting back court consists of senior Tracy Woody and junior Toni Leopard. Woody is a three year starter, who finished second on the team in rebounds and steals. She was also named to the All-South Atlantic Conference (SAC) team. Leopard started every game for the Blue Hose last year and led the team in scoring average (15.2). Leopard also earned All-SAC honors last year. Rachel Sloan returns for her senior year at forward. Sloan is a two-time Kodak All-American. She also finished in the top ten in the conference in steals, scoring, rebounds, free throw percentage, and field goal percentage. Sloan is a two time first team All-SAC selection.

On November 17-18, PC went to Kennesaw to participate in the Kennesaw State/Ron Walker Memorial Tournament. In the first game, PC faced West Georgia. PC's 50 percent shooting in the first half helped them build a 34-28 lead. PC came out strong in the second half, as they went on a 14-4 run to start the period. The Blue Hose ended up winning the game, 67-57. Sloan led the team with 14 points and five rebounds. Leopard and junior Katie Davis each had 13 points.

In the championship, PC played Kennesaw State. Sloan's career high 31 points were not enough, as PC lost 83-80 in overtime. Sloan hit two free throws in the closing seconds to push the game into overtime. However, PC was outscored 14-11 in overtime. Freshman guard Bonnie Werner had also added 13 points in the loss.

Erskine College traveled to Clinton on November 20 to play the Blue Hose. While PC started off slow and only took a 16 point lead into halftime. However, PC came out of the locker room on fire, going on a 19-0 run to start the second half. PC won 80-28. Sloan scored 21 points and had seven boards in the effort. Leopard scored 12 coming off the bench.

On November 25, PC took on Lander. PC took an eleven point advantage in the first half, thanks to freshman Bonnie Werner's 10 first half points. PC went on a 17-4 run to start the second half, to finally win 79-48. Woody scored 12 points, five steals, five rebounds, and five assists. She also became the 12th player in PC history to score over 1,000 points in her career.

On November 28, PC made their way to Florence to take on 19th ranked Francis Marion University (FMU). The PC women were only able to shoot 28.8 percent from the field, en route to their 62-48 loss. Sloan led the team with 14 points, while Leopard added 8.

Last weekend, the women traveled to Milledgeville, GA to participate in the Horton Homes Tournament. In their first game, PC faced Florida Tech. PC built up a lead that got as big as 17 points in the first half, only to see it dwindle to 36-31 at the half. PC did control the second half, getting a huge boost from Davis, who had a career high 25 points. Leopard had 19 points, while Billie Haskins had 10. PC defeated Florida 90-70.

In the championship game, PC battled Georgia College and State University (GS&SU). GS&SU took a slim 38-37 lead into the locker room at halftime. In a close second half, the score has PC up 77-76 with 1:27 to play in the game. However, Woody nailed seven out of eight free throws in the closing minutes to seal the victory, 84-78. She finished with a career high 24 points, while Sloan led the team with 28. Woody's performances earned her Tournament MVP honors.

PC goes to Anderson tomorrow to take on Anderson College at 2:00 pm.

Sidewalk Talk: Is PC's alcohol policy effective?

Junior
Susan Freeman

I feel like there was a lot of enforcement at the beginning of school, but as time goes on, people forget about it and shrug it off. No matter if it's legal or not, people are going to drink if they want.

I think people know it's there, but it's not fully enforced. The enforcement that is there is adequate. They should keep things the way they are. It's not out of control.

Junior
Robert Kurtts

Freshman
Grace Mitchell

It's not effective by legal state laws, but as far as a college campus goes, I believe they do more to promote safe alcohol usage rather than doing anything to stop it.

Do we have an alcohol policy? I don't think they enforce it.

Sophomore
Beth Bailey

Senior

I think the policy is a good idea, but it isn't enforced with any kind of regularity. The college can only encourage responsible drinking; each student must be responsible for his or her own choices.

Alcohol policy? It seems that there isn't one or it isn't enforced. I don't know what.

I didn't know we had an alcohol policy. I guess that's an indicator because I think alcohol is very heavily abused on this campus, and any rules we have are ineffective.
